"If Off Your Route It Pays To Walk"

WOUNDED PRISONER IS FOUND EXHAUSTED

(Continued from page 3.) ly before they got over the wall. The convicts were employed in doing some re-inforced concrete work in the new boiler building which is located about twenty yards from the stable which they set fire. There were a number of scantlings near the stable, and they were to be used in connection with the new boiler room. The work of building the ladder was done so quickly that the convicts only used one nail in each of the scantlings to join them together. The scantlings were fifteen feet long. Scraps of rope and small pieces of wood were used to make the steps on the ladder. A short piece of rope was used on the top rung, so the first convict who went up the ladder could hold it until the rest of the men got on. It is thought that one convict held the ladder at the bottom until one man got to the top and then there was no trouble getting over the wall. The height of the wall is thirty feet and the men jumped to the soft ground without being hurt.

Firing the Stable. The stable, which was set on fire, was large enough to accommodate about twenty horses. It is thought that there was about three or four tons of hay or straw in the barn at the time. The hay was set ablaze and the dense smoke was carried over the top of the wall and it was almost impossible to the guards located in the sentry boxes at the southeast and northeast corners of the walls to see the men until they jumped to the ground. The guard on the southeast end was about 180 feet from the men when he fired, and the man on the northeast tower would be over 200 feet.

The guard who was doing duty on the wharf was alarmed by the firing from the tower, and he fired at a distance of about two hundred yards. He was afraid to raise the sights of his rifle for any greater distance as some citizens passing along King street might be killed by the bullets.

It may not be generally known but the system of the penitentiary does not allow all short term men to work together or all long term men sentenced for the same offence to be close together. All convicts, regardless of the length of service, are put in gangs. It has been suggested that men of the type of McMullen and Slade should be kept in close quarters and make them realize that a prison term is very severe.

Guard Forsythe Shot McMullen. McMullen when captured, stated that the bullet which hit him was fired by the rifle which was in the hands of Guard Allen Forsythe, as the three convicts were turning the corner of King and Pembroke streets. McMullen said that his fingers gave him a great deal of pain but he stayed with the automobile until he arrived at Arthur Kemp's farm, five miles from the city. The point where the convicts left the stolen automobile is exactly five miles from the Whig office, and is marked with a British Whig road marker sign.

The Surprise Element. The escape of the prisoners from the penitentiary on Monday came as a great surprise, although the manner in which it was executed indicated clearly that the daring men who participated had carefully and deliberately planned every move. They chose their own time, too, for putting it into effect and it was the surprise element that enabled them to catch their guards napping and succeed in the first dash for liberty.

There are some questions that will have to be answered before the authorities can be satisfied that there will not be a repetition of the escape soon again. How can five men working in a gang in the boiler-house leave their work unobserved to accumulate material and build a ladder twenty feet or more long. Where were the guards in charge of the work these men were supposed to be assigned to?

There is a regulation which says that no two or more prisoners shall be permitted to be out of the sight or easy hearing of a guard, but McMullen, Slade, Bryans, Simpson and Brown, all long-term prisoners, appear to have had ample opportunity to carry out elaborate plans and effect their escape within the range of four armed sentries. No guards have yet been suspended in connection with the get-away.

On Tuesday morning a telegram was received from W. S. Hughes, superintendent of penitentiaries, Ottawa, authorizing the payment of a reward of $50 for the capture of each escaped prisoner.

On Duty All Night. The warden, deputy warden and members of the staff of prison were on duty all night. Every available man who was not needed within the prison enclosure was put in the county in search of the missing convicts. Warden Farnsworth was in charge of the party chasing the convicts, while Deputy Warden Tucker was in charge of the prison. Chief Keeper Matthew Welsh, although injured about the face, when one of the convicts stacked him with a pitchfork, refused to give up the chase and got medical attendance and up until ten o'clock on Tuesday morning he had not returned to the prison.

Thieves Were Busy. James Thompson, who owned the Chevrolet automobile in which the convicts escaped, stated that after the automobile was left in Mr.

Kemp's field some parties stole all the tools out of the car. It may be that the convicts took the tools thinking that they might be useful to them.

When the office staff at the prison heard of the escape, they immediately got ammunition and formed a guard outside the east wall of the prison.

Saw One of Convicts. One of the four convicts was seen in the Kemp woods early Tuesday morning, according to a citizen who watched the guards searching for the fugitives. This has confirmed the belief of the prison officials and police that the four men are still in hiding within a few hundred rods of the abandoned car, and the cord of searchers is gradually cutting down the space in which the men must be secreted.

The reports that the convicts escaped through the guards lines during Monday night have been discounted by those in authority, and every available point where they might jump on a freight train is carefully watched. The search will be continued diligently until the four men are rounded up and safely landed in their cells.
