The Irishman had called at the farm and had asked the farmer to give him a job.

The farmer at first refused to listen to a word he had to say, but after a time, in response to the man's pleading, he agreed to take him on if he could answer a number of questions satisfactorily.

All went well until the farmer asked: "Where do you come from?" "Ireland," replied the man quite readily.

"Ireland!" cried the farmer. "Then that settles it. I can have no more Irish people here; they all die on my hands."
"But, please, yer honor," said the man, "I'll get you a certificate that I have never died on the hands of any of my other four masters."

"Oh, did you see me?"

"Yes. When's it to be?"

"Don't be a fool!" said White. "I can't stand the girl really, she uses far too much make-up to suit my taste."

"Yes, she'd be quite a nice girl if she'd give up piracy."

"Piracy?" exclaimed the other. "What do you mean?"

"Why trying to make captures under false colors?"

The Lawyer—"I don't see what you two partners are quarreling about. It's a simple matter to share the assets and liabilities."
