GUN WAS NOT STOLEN; FOUND IN CLOTHES ROOM

Reported Theft at Elginburg Home Has Now Been Cleared Up.

"Much ado over nothing." This reference applies to the case of the supposed theft of a shot gun Tuesday night, at the home of Richard Ford, near Elginburg.

The shot gun in question is valued at $100, and has been the property of Mr. Ford for many years. Some time during Tuesday it was missed from its usual resting place, behind the kitchen door, and following the scare over the escape of the convicts from the penitentiary, it was thought that perhaps the desperadoes had paid a visit to the Ford home and made off with the gun.

Thursday afternoon the Kingston police were notified that the gun was missing. A report of the matter appeared in the Whig, and Warden Ponsford, who has been following up every possible clue to land the convicts, despatched three of his men to the Ford home and as a result of the visit, the case has been cleared up. The gun was not stolen, but was taken from its resting place from behind the door by Mrs. Ford had placed in a clothes room, unknown to other members of the family. The son, believing that the much-prized gun had been stolen, reported the matter to the police.

Shots Were Likely Fired By One of the Guards

The police department is making a careful investigation into the shooting of Edward McAllister, motor mechanic near Inverary on Tuesday night about ten o'clock. It is understood that the bullets were fired by one of the guards from the Portsmouth penitentiary, who was doing duty at Inverary. The city police department is going to take up the matter with the prison authorities.

Victorian Nursing.

The Victorian nurses' report for the month of August is as follows: Total visits, 332; infant welfare visits, 195; social service visits, 34; telephone conversations, 28; instructive visits, 6. The committee gratefully acknowledge the gift of an emergency bag, fully equipped, from the Rotary Club. The welfare station has been redecorated and Mrs. F. R. Robinson, V. N., has returned, quite recovered from her recent illness.

Hotel Dieu Rummage Sale at British-American Hotel continued on Saturday from 1 to 5.

STILL ELUDE THE PURSUIT

Women Prisoners Assisted. The Toronto Telegram has the following:

According to information in police circles, the escape of the convicts from Portsmouth penitentiary was carefully planned, and was to have taken place three weeks before it actually happened. The reason for the delay, was that a desperado, undergoing fifteen years' imprisonment, for a series of hold-ups, was to have been among those leaving, but as he was kept in another part of the penitentiary, and couldn't make connections, his colleagues got impatient and went away without him.

"Trusties" were given messages which were hidden in the shirts sent from the men's to the women's quarters for laundering. When the women received a message that had been agreed to act upon they sent back an "O.K." Then, at the specified time, the women started a rumpus. Guards from the men's quarters were rushed to quell the disturbance. Then the conspirators set fire to a building, and other guards rushed to that spot. Roughly, only the guards on the walls, and under orders not to leave them, were left. Thus the convicts made their getaway.

Convicts Near Portland?

A despatch from Brockville has the following:

Upon arrival here by motor, Leo Schalek, of Montreal, travelling salesman for a tobacco concern, reported that at ten o'clock Thursday morning he had seen two of the escaped prisoners from Portsmouth penitentiary at a Canadian National Railway crossing six miles east of Portland. The men were evidently walking the tracks toward Smith's Falls, and as the car approached they hid in the bushes nearby.

They were dressed in their prison trousers and straw hats, but had procured black coats. From the exceptional height of one of the men, Schalek identified him as the escaped prisoner Slade. He notified the officials of Portsmouth penitentiary.

Investigation Continues.

The investigation into the escape of the convicts at the penitentiary is being continued by Inspector Smith and Warden Ponsford, but nothing of an official nature has been given out.
