CHILD'S STORY OF THE HUMAN RACE

By Uncle Ray

Chapter 144—Good-by, Old Greece.
 Now comes the time for us to bid farewell to ancient Greece. We shall mention this little country now and then during the rest of our history, but no longer will it hold the center of our stage.

What are some of the great things to remember about Greece?
 First of all, the Greeks proved themselves the most bright-minded on earth during a period of three or four hundred years. In some ways no people before or since have equaled them.

The Greeks did not go far toward making power-machines, but they did invent many things (such as a toy steam engine and a pipe organ.) These inventions were usually treated as playthings.

The story of mankind would have been different if they had used their brains to make machines do useful work.

There were scientists among the Greeks. They kept watch on nature and put down records which have been kept for us. They did not know the shape of the earth, but some of them thought it must be round.

Other Greek thinkers spent their time pondering on the Good, the Beautiful and the True. One was named Plato. He was a pupil of Socrates. His writings are still studied by thousands of college students.

The buildings put up at Athens are among the finest the world has ever known. A temple called the Parthenon (now in ruins) is the most famous.

The Greeks made progress during times of peace. It often happened, however, that cities fought against each other. A long war between Athens and Sparta helped end the greatness of both.

This is a statue of Pericles, the highest official in Athens when some of its finest buildings were erected.

Chapter 145—The Defeat of the Gauls.

To the north of Greece was a country called Macedonia. Its most famous ruler was named Alexander. He became ruler of part of Greece. Then he led an army into Asia Minor. There he beat the Persians. Egypt and part of far-away India fell before his sword.

This man is known in history as "Alexander the Great." After his death his generals quarreled about the way his empire should be divided. It was finally split into three parts—Macedonia, Persia and Egypt. The man who got Macedonia was killed before he could take charge of the country. His grandson filled his place, but had a very hard time. At that time tribes of fierce people from western Europe were sweeping eastward, burning and killing.

These tribes were called "Gauls." They overran Macedonia, and a part of northern Greece. People everywhere feared them. In time, they forced their way into Asia Minor, spreading terror there.

It happened that there was a city in Asia Minor whose people were mostly Greeks. This city was called Perga m. It soldiers fought the Gauls and drove them back.

After the defeat of the fierce invaders, several splendid statues were made by the sculptors of Perga m. One of these shows a Gallic chief killing his wife and himself to prevent their capture. Another shows a Gallic trumpeter falling dead as the result of a wound.

Here we see a photograph of the statue of a dying Gallic trumpeter.

Let him desire nothing further whom a sufficiency has befallen. Solitude dulls the thought, too much company distastes it. None wants judgment to confirm his will.

SILENCE AT THE EMPIRE'S CENOTAPH.
 The pavement around the famous Cenotaph in Whitehall, London, is being replaced with rubber to deaden the sound of traffic. The workmen are seen unloading the rubber blocks.
