The chief cause of divorce is that the men aren't so thrilling after you have dined.

It's a case of genuine love if he feels resentful because her gown is so daring.

Some individuals do not know how to get along amiably because they never tried it.

As you grow older, the report of big guns in politics sounds suspiciously like "Ping."

Eternal youth wouldn't be such a boon unless you could remain silly enough to enjoy it.

Germany might find it just as cheap to toe the mark as to keep kicking it around.

Another thing that divorce statistics indicate is that too darned many people get married.

"Practical statesmen" are men who call a tune now and leave the pipe's end to posterity.

We don't object to people living beyond their means if they wouldn't live beyond our means.

The things a man stands for make principle, but the things a man falls for cause more interest.

Travelers are funny. They wish to see the temple, for example, instead of the man who built it.

The reason people enjoyed life in the old days was because they didn't have so much to worry about.

If it is true that the modern girl is becoming stoop-shouldered, she might try wearing lighter ear rings.

A practical-minded girl is one who never has declared that she will never marry a bald man or a fat man.

The man who first said "the horn of plenty" wasn't speaking of a neighbor's cornet. "Plenty" is too mild.

Another reason why there were so many born leaders in the old days was because there were so many born followers.

There is another side, however. Japan's great disaster may keep her out of a war that would have been even more ghastly.

LIMITING STUDENTS.

Universities and colleges all over the American continent are choosing their students. A limit is being placed upon the registration. Y. S. for instance has limited its freshmen class to 850. Equipment, classrooms and dormitories are unable to accommodate all who would enter, so the time has come when the institutions of learning can choose their students. The entrance rules laid down are not wholly examination tests, which so often yield strange results. Regard is being given to character and promise as well as to scholarly attainments. Candidates whose records show unusual promise, seriousness of purpose or achievement under difficulty are to receive particular attention. This method of rating students marks a decided advance over those once in vogue. To determine a man's character is of course no easy matter; the intellectual ability of the applicant can be more easily rated, but rather on oral than written examination.

The medical faculty of Queen's university started the choosing of students a couple of years ago and the results have proved most satisfactory. The medical freshmen at Queen's are "hand-picked" as it were. Queen's does not have to go begging for students. Rather are young men and women seeking entrance to Queen's, which is in the forefront of Canadian seats of learning.

QUEER HUMAN NATURE.

The latest addition to the list of busted Utopias is the experiment of Lord Leverhulme, the very wealthy British soap manufacturer, who invested several millions in an obligatory Millennium which simply declined to get started. The Leverhulme plan had much to commend it; in the first place the patron was able and willing to finance it—which is a vast aid to a Millennium. He purchased, for $700,000, the site, an island of the Outer Hebrides, off the west coast of Scotland. He placed thereon employees and their families and projected a model industrial community.

The persons thus transported and told to be happy ever after proved contrary folk. It seemed that no set of regulations, however benevolently conceived, suited everyone. Leverhulme poured out money lavishly. But the inhabitants simply fell short of the Leverhulme ambition again and again. At last in despair the generous benefactor has told his recalcitrant proteges to take the old island, live as they want, pay their own taxes, and, in a word, be completely free.

There is a mixture of grief and rejoicing on the Isle of Lewis. Taxes is a word that always falls dourly on the mind of man. But liberty has its price and, on the whole, the islanders may find, like the rest of the world, that a tolling, self-respecting life of independence is a wonderful medicine to prevent stagnation.

A $10,000,000 CIGARETTE.

Fire prevention days and weeks and campaigns must necessarily be repetitions of old truths supported by new instances. The latest is the $10,000,000 conflagration which swept Berkeley, Calif., the other day, destroying 600 homes, rendering 4,000 persons homeless and causing loss of life. The blame for this stupendous destruction is laid to the careless handling of a cigarette.

Ten million dollars is a considerable amount to pay for warning. The property loss entailed in the Japanese earthquake and ensuing fires corresponds to what America pays each decade for destruction by fire alone.

Doubtless, we shall always have fires, since at times they originate in causes which appear to be beyond the control and perceptions of man. But the Governor-General of Canada in proclaiming the week of October 9th as Fire Prevention Week, is correct in his assumption that by far the greater part of fire loss is due to human factors, such as carelessness and moral hazards.

This country holds every record for avoidable conflagrations. As long as millions of dollars' worth of property are consumed each year in fires growing out of everyday carelessness, the forces laboring for reduction of that loss are pursuing a work which is not only justifiable but highly necessary. The utter seriousness of this labor and the drastic necessity for paying heed to the incredible destruction it seeks to curtail can hardly be lost on the informed and thoughtful citizen.

GERMAN SUBMITS.

The German government, in capitulating to the French in the Ruhr, has yielded to the inevitable, for while it could annoy and thwart the designs and desires of the French it could not break the Blue grip on her throat. The republican government in power has surrendered to France unconditionally, but in so doing may it not have played into the hands of the communists and monarchists, whose ominous shadows have been seen gradually but surely overcasting republican skies in Germany, awaiting the critical moment to strike?

Facing three enemies—the French,

the communists and the monarchists—sensing its impotency against the combined forces of the three, the republican government was forced into acquiescence to the French in the Ruhr that her sadly strained resources and powers of resistance might be reserved for a possible uprising of the communists or the monarchists, singly or simultaneously.

Traditional pride and loyalty to the fatherland may make non-resistance in the Ruhr unpopular and bring to a head the long threatened revolution. Might it not be probable that two factions as far apart in their governmental theories as the communists and monarchists should see the advantage in combining their forces in the overthrow of the republican government, each depending upon its own superior strength in erecting its form of government upon the ruins of the present and in defiance to the faction which helped make revolution possible?

Thus while official resistance to the French and Belgians will end, the effect on Germany internally leaves much unsettled. If the government is strong enough to hold in check the diverse elements the way may be opened to final adjustment of the reparations question and the inauguration of a prosperous era not only for Germany but for all Europe.

That Germany has decided finally that yielding is the only possible course is a vindication of the policy of France. The latter contended that an exhibition of force was the only argument that could be recognized by Germany. It has been expensive, for both sides, having cost many lives and $1,000,000,000. It would have been far better for Germany to have met her obligations honorably than to have invited the long impasse, but if it ends now and internal conflict in Germany is checked quickly, peace at last may be realized. But for the present eyes will be strained to discern the reaction of the German citizenship to the capitulation.

PRESS COMMENT

The Considerate Mistress.

Modern education is so inadequate that few people of either sex are capable of passing time profitably or even pleasantly when left alone. Meanwhile, it is not to be denied that mistresses can do much to make the lives of their servants endurable. The Central Committee on Women's Training touches the root of the problem when it says that it is exclusively psychological, and no feature of its report is more welcome than that which speaks of the recent great increase in the number of considerate mistresses.—London Chronicle.

Immigrants for Canada.

At present Canada exports from twenty-five to thirty million bushels annually. That estimate does not include the opportunities for mixed farming for the home market in the irrigated districts of the prairie; which provides a good living for the man who is prepared to work hard and continuously. It is probable that the difficulty of settling the corn-lands largely consists in the lack of communications, which again prevents the establishment of townships. At the same time, Canada possesses the finest railway system of any Dominion; and it would seem that what is required is a systematic scheme of extension and colonization throughout the region to the east of the Rocky Mountains.—London Morning Post.

No More Bounties.

A few days ago the minister for customs had to utter some plain truths to a deputation that waited upon him from Tasmanian orchardists with the request for an export bounty of a penny a pound on apples. Very naturally, the deputation cited as precedents for the bonus they sought the action of the Commonwealth Government in granting an export bounty on beef, as also in fixing a stated price for sugar. The Government, however, are telling the meat industry that it must fend for itself after the expiration of the temporarily renewed subsidy arrangement, and they are also getting out of what remains of the sugar control as quickly as they can. Mr. Chapman, in replying to the Tasmanian deputation, mentioned the losses on the canned fruit pools, and said the pool system was bad.—Adelaide Chronicle.

Wesley's Tomb.

John Wesley's tomb, now in course of repair, is to be treated, it is interesting to notice, as a national relic. The house adjoining the tomb where he died in 1791 is to be included in the restoration plan, as well as the chapel itself, which Wesley built and where he ministered during the last fifteen years of his life. This latter edifice was the successor of one some little distance away founded by the great Methodist in 1759 out of a renovated cannon factory, and did duty for headquarters through fifty strenuous years. The tomb of such a great man is worthy of all the respect that can be paid, and should bear some suitably-inscribed tablet—so that all who run may read.—Montreal Gazette.

Simplicity is that grace which frees the soul from all unnecessary reflections upon itself. Unfortunate and imprudent are but two words for the same thing.

MONEY AT WORK

Brief but Important Lessons in Finance, Markets, Stocks, Bonds and Investments

ANALYSIS OF INVESTMENTS S = SAFETY M = MARKETABILITY I = INCOME

There are three big factors in every investment: (1) Marketability; (2) safety; and (3) income. Look for them.

It is common for some one to ask for a security which is absolutely safe, both as to principal and income; readily marketable; with a high interest rate. There aren't any.

The best bonds are safe, income is assured and they are readily marketable, but they have a low yield.

If you are investing for a long time and are willing to give up a quick market, a higher yield can be obtained. Also if you want less safety, a higher yield can be found.

All three factors are valuable. They determine the price of securities. Figure out which ones you want. You can't get all three combined with a high yield.

Natures Liver Squeezer.

In a former article I told of the work the bile did for your body. Perhaps you remember? It breaks up the fats of the food so that they can be absorbed by the system. It also is a great germ fighter, taking care of lots of things that we take into us that would otherwise have done us harm.

And finally it is a natural purgative, and if flowing into the intestine properly one should never have constipation.

I also spoke of a bending exercise, a "liver squeezer" as it is called, by simply bending from side to side with knees and back kept straight.

This exercise sends the bile into the intestine in increased amounts. Now there is another part of your body that is squeezing the liver for you all the time and you never really think about it.

You see Nature is doing it for you, and you ordinarily have nothing to do with it.

Now what part is it? Well, you can call it the floor of the chest or the roof of the abdomen, which ever you like, because it is really both.

I refer to the diaphragm, that wide muscular band that is stretched between the chest and the abdomen keeping them separated, one from the other.

And how does it squeeze the liver? Why, every time you take in a breath the diaphragm goes down against the liver and gives it a "squeeze."

Just see what this means. Eighteen times a minute, twenty four hours in a day, you liver gets a little compression from the diaphragm.

And yet notwithstanding this constant squeezing by the diaphragm your liver is perhaps not pouring out the bile properly.

What's the matter? Your liver needs a little more pressure on it. Perhaps the bile is a little thicker in you than in the average person.

Now how to get it flowing again. By simply taking long breaths and thus making your diaphragm go down further each time, and thus have more action on the liver.

When you run you have to breathe so deeply that your diaphragm goes down deeper and gives the liver a harder knock or squeeze.

If at all constipated, its worth trying, isn't it?

HOW FAME IS GAINED.

London Observer. Probably no public man has a less retentive memory for faces than Mr. Augustine Birrell. During his Chief Secretaryship for Ireland, while staying at an hotel in Killarney, he was introduced to a government official named Fitzpatrick. Next morning Mr. Birrell, on coming downstairs, went up to a man named Bentley, whom he had met casually a year before, and shook him warmly by the hand. Mr. Bentley was both pleased and surprised that Mr. Birrell should have recognized him on the spot, but when someone remarked to the Chief Secretary about his meeting with Mr. Bentley, Mr. Birrell replied: "Bentley, who is Bentley?" "Why, that chap you raved up to and shook hands with in the hall." "Good heavens!" said Mr. Birrell: "I thought he was Fitzpatrick." Some time afterwards Mr. Bentley was heard holding forth in a train on the subject of Mr. Birrell. "I haven't a word to say for his policy and all that," he said, "but there is one remarkable characteristic about him; Birrell never forgets a face!"

TREES.

In the Garden of Eden planted by God. There were goodly trees in the springtime sod: Trees of beauty and height and grace

To stand in splendor in His face: Apple and hickory, ash and pear, Oak and beech and the tulip rare;

The trembling aspen, the noble pine, The sweeping elm by the river line; The lilac tree for the joy of spring; Trees to turn at the frosty call

And carpet the ground for the Lord's footfall: Wood for the bow, the spear, the flail,

The keel and the mast of the daring mail; He made them of every grain and girth

For the use of man in the Garden of Earth; Then lest the soul not lift her eyes

From the gift to the Giver of Paradise. On the crown of a hill, for all to see

He planted a scarlet MAPLE TREE. —BLISS CARMAN.

ONE BULL FIGHT WAS ENOUGH.

London Advertiser. A London man who has returned from Europe admitted to a few of his friends that he had seen a bull fight in Barcelona. He also admitted that he was not proud of the fact that he had attended. To him it was repulsive and revolting, a sacrifice of poor, blindfolded horses, and of bulls.

His view is interesting. "You say it is no worse than our auto races where riders are pitched into the air in collisions and killed. I tell you it is an entirely different thing. A man goes into a race of that sort of his own free will, and he knows the chances he takes. A bull fight is different. I shall never forget the way a poor, battered horse, blindfolded and trembling, and mounted by a picador, was led broadside to an infuriated bull that simply charged and sunk its horns into the side of the poor animal. The horse was thrashed and made to get out of the London, Sept. 28.—Sir Broderick Hartwell, the bootlegging Irish Baronet, has issued a new batch of circulars announcing that contributors to his first trip will get their money back with 20 per cent. interest about the middle of October. He now invites further subscriptions of not less than £2 15s, with a promise to return it with the same profit about December 1st. Prudence and good-breeding are in all stations necessary.
