FOUR THOUSAND 'PHONES NOW USED IN KINGSTON

Some Interesting History Regarding the Bell Telephone Co. Here.

When the construction department of the Bell Telephone Company installed a telephone to-day on Bagot street, Kingston had connected to its switchboard four thousand telephones.

The first telephone office was opened in Kingston in 1881 on Ontario street, with C. W. Stringer, as acting manager. Among the early subscribers were Britton & Whiting, barristers; Col. Campbell, C. F. Gildersleeve, William Harty, Kirkpatrick and Rogers, barristers, and James Richardson & Son. In 1883, R. Freeman succeeded Mr. Stringer. At this time there were 108 subscribers. In 1886 A. T. Smith, now division manager, central division, Toronto, succeeded Mr. Freeman, and on Mr. Smith's promotion to Toronto in 1900, H. W. Snelling, now manager of the company's branch at Georgetown, was appointed manager. In 1908 Kingston had outgrown its Ontario street office, and with its magneto system of 720 telephones, moved to the present office on Clarence street where the latest type of common battery system was put into use. Since then the local and long distance switch board has been extended until to-day they occupy the whole of the second floor.

Kingston is a Morse centre, having duplex tables for the transmission of telegraph over telephone wires, and is also a repeater station for the boosting of haul conservation over long distance lines.

In 1917, J. A. Gorrie, Jr., now district manager at Ottawa, took over the management of the local office. He was succeeded in 1919 by Matthew Graham, now assistant manager in Montreal. In December, 1922 the present manager, W. A. G. Spriggs succeeded Mr. Graham, who with Miss J. A. Rutley, chief operator in charge of the traffic department, are at the service of the telephone public in Kingston and the surrounding district.

A BETTER REGULATION GOVERNING FISH NETS

Is Demanded by the Fishermen's Association, Which Met on Saturday.

The fishermen from Collin's Bay and Simcoe Island met in Kingston on Saturday afternoon to discuss the regulations in force over the nets permitted under the Ontario fisherman's license. There is general dissatisfaction over the laws governing the size of the mesh, and the attitude of the government toward the fishermen, as shown by the prosecutions of residents of Simcoe Island and Bath during the past season.

George Simmons, Collin's Bay, president of the Fishermen's Association, occupied the chair, and after considerable discussion it was decided to draw up strong representations on behalf of the deep water fishermen. All of those present expressed their protest over the interpretation of the act, and they claim that the nets placed on the market and sold as regulation nets are outside of their control. They want a better regulation governing the nets.
