THE BEAUTIFUL EYE IS THE HEALTHY EYE. Nature may have endowed you with beautiful eyes, but there is no assurance that Nature alone will PRESERVE their beauty. In other words, it's up to you to give them such care that they will remain healthy and thus retain their beauty.

THE MATTER OF AGE.

Brockville Recorder-Times Gives British Whig Due Credit For Being Oldest Paper in Kingston.

Brockville Recorder-Times. This from the Kingston Standard:

"The Brockville Recorder and Times keeps standing at the head of its editorial page the declaration that it is 'Ontario's oldest newspaper,' this being the fiftieth year of its daily edition.

"Some time when the handsome and accomplished editor of the Recorder and Times is in Kingston we will be glad to show him files of this daily newspaper ante-dating by some considerable years the fiftieth year mark which stands to the credit of the Recorder."

The Recorder and Times has neither time nor inclination to accept the very kind invitation of the Kingston Standard, the greetings of the editor of which are heartily reciprocated. Nor is it the purpose of this newspaper to question the antiquity of the daily editions of its Kingston contemporaries, notably that of the British Whig, the first daily in Ontario and established at a date long anterior to the foundation of the Standard. For both it has nothing but the warmest admiration. Nevertheless, there is not the slightest intention on the part of this newspaper of altering by one syllable the phraseology which appears at the head of this column.

As the Standard well knows, such claim to longevity as is made by this newspaper is based upon the continuous and uninterrupted publication without variation in title for more than one hundred and two years of its weekly edition. The Brockville Recorder. The caption to which the Standard objects is thus qualified and it would be presumption and untruthful that any other distinction should be assumed. The record of the Brockville Recorder, in which its publishers take pardonable pride, is one which no other publication in the province can equal. It is without exception "Ontario's Oldest Newspaper," and as such it will remain for the period of its existence. Should its publication ever cease, the probability is that the mantle which it wears would descend upon The Christian Guardian, established by Egerton Ryerson in 1829, with The Kingston Whig, founded in 1833 by the equally spirited Dr. Barker, as next in succession.

The preposterous claim of The Standard to an age of 114 years might be regarded as impudent were it not ridiculous. No newspaperman in possession of the facts but is amused by the pretence. The Brockville Recorder. The Kingston Whig, The Belleville Intelligencer and numerous other newspapers had enjoyed an existence of scores of years before The Standard was either conceived or born. Its origin is comparatively recent and for the creation of its self-computed age, it combines the existences of The Kingston Gazette, established by Stephen Miles in 1810; The Kingston Chronicle, established in 1819, and the News-Chronicle, an amalgamation. Not one of these three survived and between the dates of their appearance there were intervals in which publication was suspended and even in the course of their respective careers there were periods when the presses were idle.

Contrast this with the history of The Brockville Recorder, always bearing that title and, thanks to the perseverance of its successive proprietors and the confidence of the public which it has served, never missing an issue in all its long career, with the possible and unavoidable exception of a brief space in 1849 when its premises were gutted by fire. The reader may judge for himself which of these two newspapers possesses the greater qualifications for recognition as "Ontario's Oldest Newspaper." The Recorder has certainly no intention of abandoning its slogan and has no apology to make for its continued use.

HINTS FOR THE MOTORIST

ALBERT L. CLOUGH. "Hard Starting Time" Again

Be Sure Your Choker Will Fully Choke The Air Intake

NOW THAT COLD NIGHTS HAVE COME AGAIN, the old bugbear of difficult engine starting is bound to reappear. If your engine begins to be refractory in this regard, after having been perfectly docile during warm weather, remember that in nine cases out of ten the reason why an engine does not commence to fire promptly is because there is nothing inflammable in its cylinders. In other words, there is not enough highly volatile hydrocarbon material in the fuel which reaches the cylinders to render the air in them inflammable, at its lowered temperature. One remedy for this condition is to use fuel having a larger proportion of very volatile constituents, viz.: a higher test gasoline, and another is to increase the amount of ordinary gasoline that enters the cylinders. Stopping all air-leaks in the intake system, slightly enlarging the carburetor's opening and insuring the tight closing of the choker are the best means of accomplishing this end. A third remedy is to furnish the fuel for starting in a very finely divided state, thus reducing its tendency to condensation and more fully exposing it to mixture with and vaporization by the air—in other words to use a manifold primer of improved design. A fourth method is to counteract prevailing low temperatures by applying heat to assist vaporization, which may be done by the use of an electrical heating element located in the carburetor bowl or in the intake piping, or by filling the engine jackets with hot water. To find out whether hard starting is due to lack of ignitable mixture or to some other cause, inject into each cylinder a teaspoonful or so of a mixture containing one-third ether and two-thirds gasoline and crank the engine. If it fires promptly and continues to run for a short time, the difficulty is lack of inflammable mixture. If it does not, ignition is probably at fault.

BRINE AS AN ANTI-FREEZE LIQUID

E. P. writes: I have been told that if enough common salt is dissolved in the radiator water it will not freeze. Do you recommend using it?

Answer: It is true that a strong solution of common salt has a much lower freezing point than water and thus acts as an anti-freeze liquid, but its use is not to be recommended. Its solution not only has a corrosive effect upon the metals, but is also an active electrolyte and causes galvanic action at the junctions of dissimilar metals in the radiator and pump by which one or the other of the metals involved is gradually eaten away. This action may occur between the solder and the brass of the radiator; finally resulting in leaky joints or between the parts of the pump, especially if aluminum is used in its construction. These electrolytic effects may be so gradual as not to be noticed for some time, but after long use of this or any other saline solution, as an anti-freezeant, they are likely to prove serious. If you care to use any saline solution, neutral calcium chloride will be found better than common salt.

LOOSE STEERING COLUMN

E. L. M. writes: The two large rivets which hold the steering gear housing to the frame of my car, have worked loose, allowing it to rattle and have a slight play. Can these rivets be tightened, or can they be replaced with bolts, so as to hold all right?

Answer: Heading down these rivets would hardly give you satisfactory results, as doubtless the holes have worn large and out of round. By reaming the holes true and using slightly larger rivets, you might obtain a secure job, although it is very difficult to get at the rivets to be riveted, after a car is fully assembled and not many shops have the best riveting equipment. We believe that if you can get some bolts of first-class steel, with the fine thread and ream out the rivet holes to a close fit for the bolts, using lock-washers under the nuts, you will obtain a reliable job. Perhaps you can use bolts of a larger diameter than the rivets.
