

You Can Eat Anything You Like and Not Have HEARTBURN

In all cases of heartburn there is a gnawing and burning pain in the stomach attended by a disturbed appetite, as when too much food is taken into the stomach it is liable to ferment and become extremely sour, vomiting occurs, and what is thrown up is generally sour and bitter. When you are in this condition you will find that Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills will give you relief right away.

Mr. Joseph H. MacDonald, Christmas Island, N.S., writes:—"Two years ago I suffered all the time from heartburn. I took one vial of Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills and have never been troubled since. It is very nice to be able to eat anything you like and not have heartburn any more."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c. a vial at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

HUMAN NATURE ON THE HALF SHELL

By Joseph Van Raalte

The story of a misguided Bee which became angry when she stung a package of cut plug in mistake for a perfectly good bit of human anatomy.

Question: Are you liable if somebody else's bee gives you a fatal stab to somebody trying to convince the loose shingles on the roof of your barn to settle down.

A year ago last July a man by the name of Frank Nichols, of Kokomo, Indiana, climbed up on the roof of a barn belonging to the T. J. Dye and Son farm, for the purpose of persuading some loose shingles to abandon their dissolute ways, and settle down.

It requires concentration, not to say singleness of purpose, to put the fear of the Lord into a flock of shingles whose dispositions have become warped and curled at the edges.

Mr. Nichols became engrossed in his task, as a shingle savant should. Once in a while he would pause, spit thoughtfully over the side of the barn into an adjacent paddy bed, after which he would shift his chew, rub his palms on the seat of his navy-blue overalls and resume labor.

A feminine bee, buzzing through the summer sunshine, in a yellow and black camel's hair sport sweater, caught sight of Mr. Nichols as he bent over his task and made at once in his direction. The bee had mistaken the gable end of Mr. Nichols' personality for a cluster of begonias.

Sinking her honey detector into the pocket in which Nich kept his cut plug and his lucky piece, Miss Bee realized almost instantly that her girlish trust and confidence had been violated.

Hell hath no fury like a bee betrayed. Hastily withdrawing, she fumbled around in her reticule, took out her grindstone, sharpened the Democratic, or business end of her tall shaft, heated it over a blow torch, backed off a few paces, started her propeller with an angry buzz and charged.

"You cur," cried the bee, as she struck.

"Thy mercy on Thy people, Lord!" cried Mr. Nichols.

As Fabre says: "The bee is small in size, yet perfect in mechanical operation."

That is very true. Mr. Nichols dropped his hammer.

grabbed himself by the cut plug, under the impression that his back pocket had been struck by lightning. He rose to his full height with a vivid blush on his face, a bilster on his personality and in his heart a strong yearning for home.

And home Mr. Nichols went, but he was never the same again. While the bee had put something into him, it had, at the same time, taken something away. His pride had been hurt. His faith in things had been tampered with. He had always said that nature was grand—and nature had sneaked up behind him on the house top and stung him in the saddest, maddest place a man can be stung.

There was but one thing left for Mr. Nichols to do. He did it. He had been stung in July. In November, when the frost was on the pumpkin and the fadden in the shock, Mr. Nichols departed from Kokomo for heaven.

He died on election day. Along about Thanksgiving time Mrs. Nichols and her daughter, known to her friends as Miss Jitney, appeared before the State Industrial Board asking damages under the Workman's Compensation Law.

The Board made an award in their favor against the owners of the barn, Old Man Dye and his young son, Diamond.

Both Mr. Dye and his son were pretty blue. They had contended that a bee in action comes under the head of An Act of God, like lightning, or measles, or Fanny Brice's ex-nose.

"It was your barn, wasn't it?" said the Board.

Old Man Dye said they were damaged, it was his barn, but it was not his bee.

"According to common sense, and in the ordinary dealing between man and man," said the Board, "that would let you out; but in law it lets you in—for damages. In law, anything that counts is ruled out on the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial."

VAN RAALTE TALKS ON BEES AND THE LAW

"Hell hath no fury like a bee bee-trayed."

"A bee in action comes under the head of an act of God, like lightning, or measles, or Fanny Brice's ex-nose."

"In law, anything that counts is ruled out on the ground that it is incompetent."

"It requires concentration to put the fear of the Lord into a flock of shingles whose dispositions have become warped at the edges."

"But Nichols did not die from the sting of the bee," said Old Man Dye.

"Then what did he die of?" said the Board.

Dye said he didn't know.

"Very well," said the Board, "the burden of proof is on you. You have not produced the bee to sustain your contention. You will therefore have to come across. Heaven may protect the working girl, but this Board is here to see that the working man is not stung with impunity."

It was not the money Mr. Dye cared about, it was the principle of the thing. He appealed his case.

"The question here," said the Appellate Court, "resolves itself into two considerations: When was Nichols stung, and if so, where? Mrs. Nichols contends that her husband was stung in the month of July."

"That's bad," "Mr. Dye, the appellant, who admits the sting but denies the place, has not produced the bee. The testimony 'incloses that neither has Mrs. Nichols produced the place that was stung."

"If we had the bee and the place that was stung we could see if they fit. Not having them, the contention of Mrs. Nichols, the Plaintiff in the original action, becomes Corpus Delicti, Requisite in Pace, as well as Non Compos Mentis. The finding of the lower court is therefore almost respectfully reversed."

Mrs. Nichols declares she is not going to say a word till she finds out whether you can pay for contempt of court on the instalment plan.
