THE GIRL FROM BJORN'S

By Justin Westwood. "Fancy meeting you in New York," exclaimed Dolly putting out a neat gloved hand to Dick. "What are you doing here?"

snabby-looking apartment building. Perkins had the girl by the arm, as if supporting her, and he did not see Dick as he hurried up the steps behind them in time to catch the door as it was swinging back.

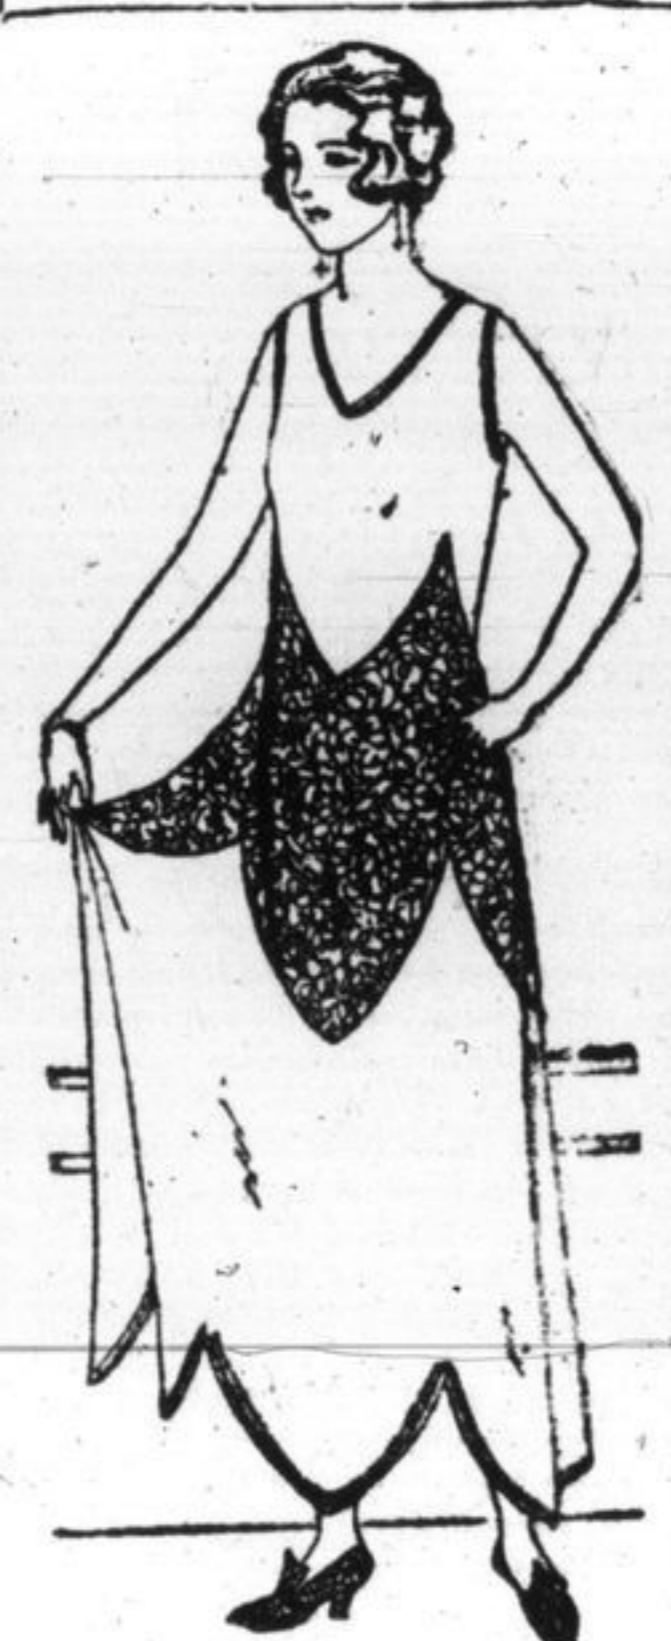

"This isn't my home, Mr. Perkins! You've made a mistake—I mean the driver. Take me—" Perkins caught her in his arms and strained her to him. The girl screamed.

"Come, Dolly," said Dick, and, giving her his arm, he led her out of the place. "Oh Dick!" sobbed Dolly in the street. "I've been a fool. He—he must have drugged me in that restaurant, and—how did you know?"

TO-DAY'S FASHION

This Gown Dispenses with a Belt In Order to Display a Wide Inset of Silver Lace.

The beltless gown is coming into its own this season. It is always a very lovely style, but it is not becoming to many types of figures, so that its popularity is always restricted.

The model shown above is one of the most charming examples of this fashion. It is made of baby-blue taffeta over a slip of silver cloth.

PURITY FLOUR

He called the next afternoon, but Dolly had gone out. He waited till she arrived—in a taxi, accompanied by a man who put Dick's back up.

"Well, Dick?" There was mild interrogation in Dolly's look. "Dolly, who's your friend?" "That? Mr. Perkins, the business manager at Bjorn's. He's a good fellow."

"He tried to kiss you!" "Well," she flamed out, "what if he did? One has to stand in with these people and lead them on a bit if one wants to get anywhere."

"Dolly," he pleaded, "I don't want—won't you?" Dolly looked at him and burst out laughing.

"Why, Dick," she mocked, "any one would think you were still in love with me. Call again when I'm in!"

Dick called again and found her in. With her was a flashy type girl from Bjorn's. They chatted all the evening of men and women. Dick outstayed when she was gone, asked her to marry him.

"Why, Dick, what said Dolly. 'I'm going to marry a rich man who'll take care of me properly. No, Dick, you, but—M's absurd!'"

When he tried to kiss her companions and so Dick passed up the office and opposite Bjorn's, Dolly. He found the store to what he had done. It was a taxi.
