NINE BILLIONS IN GOLD

WORLD'S TOTAL GOLD STOCK FOR FINANCIAL USE.

United States Has More Than a Third

ually Flowing Back to Europe.

How much money is there in the world? The printing presses in Europe have been turning it out at so breathless a rate that it is hard' to say. But a survey of the situation brings out some interesting facts and some extraordinary figures.

An Englishman in Egypt sold some extensive holdings to natives and in the final negotiations, having a mind for fluctuations of exchange, named gold as the basis of payment. When the day of payment came neither cheque nor draft was tendered him, but in the narrow street beneath his window there drew up a little file of donkeys, laden with bags of literal gold. The payment was spot cashin bright new gold pieces mined in California, in floring such as have not been made for centuries, in pieces of eight and guineas of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. It was gold drawn from hiding places such as one reads of in the Arabian Nights.

The total in banks and public treasuries was $8,060,493,000, to which is added $299,980,000 under the heading "metallic stock unclassified," while in addition there is the amount of gold in circulation in coined pieces. This last item comes to no more than $185,338,000. Considering the world's money supply as a whole, there is also the silver stock, $2,275,138,000. These figures are for countries covering virtually the whole world, having a total population of 1,595,-544,000. This reduces the world per capita circulation to the following

Name Has Been Popularized, and

Will Probably Remain. It was an Englishman, Dr. John Bostock, who, after suffering from "heat in the eyes, with itching and smarting, followed by violent sneezing, tightness of the chest, difficulty in breathing, langor, and loss of appetite every summer" for thirtyeight years, wrote a paper describing his annual torment, and because of its seasonal occurrence he called the affection hay fever. This was in 1819, but since that time we have learned that a similar annual visitation may come to different people at different periods of the summer, to some early, to some late, but not in all cases does it coincide with haying. But the name has been popularized, and will probably remain.

Dr. Bostock had an idea that his sufferings, recurring at about the same time each year, and always in the having season, were engendered by the smell of new-mown hay. This opinion he held until, on the occasion of a visit to Ramsgate, he had an attack of the fever-without the help of any hay. This drove him to the new belief that his sufferings poses. That, however, is only a Meanwhile hundreds of thousands of unhappy mortals went on speezing regularly during a long period every summer for fifty-four years without knowing why they did it. Those who survived in 1873, however, might have enlightened themselves had they read Dr. Charles H. Blackley's paper on "Experimental Researches on the Causes and Nature of Catarrhus Ætivus," which attributed their annual complaint to the inhalation of the pollen of certain plants. But "certain plants" was too wide a term to satisfy the medical profession, and there started a controversy between different schools of belief, one holding the view that all plants gave off the poisonous pollen; whilst other schools were more particular in their accusations.

In the course of researches relating to this controversy, Blackley demonstrated the remarkable fact (that will surely be comforting to all hay fever sufferers who are not airplane frequenters) that there is nineteen times as much pollen in the upper strata of the air as near the ground. At that time the hay fever season was usually regarded as commencing in the early days of June and lasting until the end of July, this period covering the appearance of the pollen in the air to its disappearance.

Why certain individuals should be the annual victims of hay fever and their brothers remain immune has never been definitely established, says a writer in "Nature," neither has a permanent and wholly satisfactory cure for the complaint been discovered. But wealthy sufferers may betake themselves to certain spots in the world which are alleged to give relief. Ludy Island, and some of the islands in the Hebrides, Heligoland. and Fire Island, on the Atlantic side of Long Island, U.S., are some of the places where noses are treated with the respect they deserve by the local flora .- Family Herald.

Decrease in Liquor Consumption. Less drunkenness was the natural result of a decrease in the quantity of liquor consumed in England and Wales during 1922.
