CHILD'S STORY OF THE HUMAN RACE By Uncle Ray

Joan Goes to See the Dauphin. When Joan of Arc was 17, she decided to go to see the dauphin of France. That word "dauphin" meant the eldest son of the king. It was the same thing as "crown prince."

Joan was a good-looking girl, with dark hair and a friendly face. At least one young man wanted to marry her, but she would not listen. She felt she had "a duty for God."

Her father began to suspect she was going to join the army. One day he told her:

"I would rather drown you, then let you go among the soldiers." Joan did not like to disobey her father, but she was firm about wanting to do what "the voices" told her. She went to her cousin's home in a nearby town. Her cousin's husband was named Laxart. Joan said to him:

"I would rather drown you, then let you go among the soldiers." Joan did not like to disobey her father, but she was firm about wanting to do what "the voices" told her. She went to her cousin's home in a nearby town. Her cousin's husband was named Laxart. Joan said to him:

"The King of Heaven has told me to do two things. First I must lead an army to drive the English away from Orleans. Next I must put the crown on the head of the dauphin, so he can be king of France."

Laxart told her he would do what he could for her.

Together they went to a certain village and asked a captain to help them. The captain said Joan ought to be taken home and whipped.

This did not make Joan lose heart. She went to a duke and asked him to help her get to see the dauphin. The duke was a sickly man. He did not care about saving France, but he asked her to cure him.

Joan left the duke's home, and started on the road to see the dauphin. Laxart went back to his home town. The girl traveled with two soldiers whom she had met. She wore men's clothes.

At last they reached Chinon, the town where the dauphin was staying. His name was Charles.

Charles was a weak-minded man. While France was in danger, he spent his time feasting. The news that a maiden was "coming to save France" had been told him. He was curious to see her.

Joan talked to Charles. He listened, but could not make up his mind. He told her to come another time. Again and again, she came to see him, but each time he did "not know what to do."

Finally, he turned her over to a group of priests. He told them to find out whether she was guided by "good spirits" or "evil spirits."

Joan did not like to have the priests question her, but she gave them answers. They told the king she must be in the hands of good spirits.

An army was raised for Joan to lead. At its head, she rode toward Orleans.

Next—Joan's Victory and Death.

Knights in armor, like the man in the picture above, rode in the army led by Joan toward Orleans.

"The King of Heaven has told me to do two things. First I must lead an army to drive the English away from Orleans. Next I must put the crown on the head of the dauphin, so he can be king of France."

Earth and Rocks Carried Off—Bridge and Boat House Swept Away.

Westport, Feb. 18.—About 2 p.m. on Friday, there was a small opening noticed in the earth portion at the end of the cement dam just at the electric power house, and before any person could repair the damage about twenty feet of the earth gave way and carried the bridge and J. R. Whaley's boat house and boats away on the ice. The Rideau carried rocks and clay around the electric power wheel, cutting off the electric lights for some time. It will cost C. Stoney in the neighborhood of $4,000 to repair the damage, besides the expense to the village to repair the bridges, etc.
