PLEA OF GUILTY ENTERED

Four Students Fined Twenty-five Dollars Each in Assault Case.

On their counsel, Francis King, changing their plea of "not guilty," to that of "guilty," to a charge of "assaulting and ill-treating, with intent to commit an indictable offence," in the case of a Whig reporter, who was attacked on the night of Feb. 19th, and given a mock trial at Queen's gymnasium over an article the accused was alleged to have written. Magistrate Farrell on Monday morning imposed a fine of $25 and costs in each case, with the option of one month in jail. The students will also have to make good the damage done to the reporter's clothing.

Mr. King stated that when the case was before the court last week, he had entered a plea of "not guilty" and had asked for further particulars about the charge. He had consulted with Mr. Rigney, crown attorney, and had found that the charge came under section 297 B "with intent to seize and interfere with liberty." He now asked leave to changing the plea of "not guilty" to one of "guilty."

"In all four cases?" queried Mr. Rigney. "Yes," replied Mr. King. In his address to the magistrate, Mr. King stated that the students admitted a technical offence in having taken the law in their own hands. The students admitted that they did wrong. He understood, however, that no violence had been shown towards the plaintiff and he believed this to be true.

Mr. King then went on to tell what he believed had been the cause of the trouble and intimated that a report had been sent out of the city criticising dances at the college.

As a result of something which had occurred, these four students had taken the matter into their own hands and had taken the plaintiff before a college court. In pleading guilty to the charge, Mr. King stated that he wanted to point out that the accused had been invited to go to the college court and he went without violence. He was submitted to a trial in the gymnasium and the trial took place without violence. And as a result of the trial no penalty had been imposed. The plaintiff had merely suffered the indignity of a trial at the hands of the students. In holding this trial the students had merely carried out the college tradition. The mistake the students had made was in going outside of their own college. The plaintiff was not a graduate of the college; if so he might not have taken the matter so seriously.

Here the magistrate interrupted to point out that the police and not the plaintiff had taken action in the case.

Mr. King asked the magistrate to impose a fine rather than a more severe penalty and also suggested suspended sentence. "It was nothing more than a college prank carried on in the interests of what they thought was right," added Mr. King.

Mr. Rigney, for the crown, pointed out that the charge the students had pleaded guilty to was very serious. It must be brought home to the student body that whatever liberties they took among themselves could not be taken outside of their body. The students had transgressed in assuming to take the law in their own hands. In this case the students had attacked an inoffensive citizen who looked for the protection of the law. It had been stated that the students were but performing a duty of their Alma Mater, but he wished to repudiate this. Mr. Rigney stated that he had the same Alma Mater and if the traditions of his Alma Mater upheld such a thing as this, it was time it was eradicated. Such a thing as this would not be tolerated in this city. Mr. Rigney also referred to the affair as "Ku Klu Klan methods."

Mr. Rigney commented on the wisdom of counsel changing the plea of the students to one of "guilty" and also referred to the fact that the plaintiff had suffered damage to his clothing. This would also have to be taken into consideration.

Magistrate Farrell, in imposing sentence, stated that the matter had been gone into thoroughly, not only by the crown but also by the counsel for the students. The students found themselves in a most unfortunate position. Certain things were done in a University by tradition. Students submitted to certain things and they too might take objection. While certain things were done in university circles the moment the students went outside their own circle they transgressed. The students were not above the civil law. Students submitted to certain things and they too might take objection. While certain things were done in university circles the moment the students went outside their own circle they transgressed. The students were not above the civil law.

"I do not think that this case can be met by suspended sentence. The seriousness of the case must be brought home, not only to you but to anyone involved in it and it must be understood that such a thing will not be tolerated. I will impose a fine of $25 and costs in each case, with the option of a month in jail, the costs in the damage to clothing to be also met."

From the Whig of Feb. 19th. In view of much misunderstanding regarding the Whig's recent remarks about dancing, we reproduce a paragraph from an editorial in our issue of February 18th, which will show our high regard for the university's social functions:

"With regard to Queen's this can be truly said—that nowhere are dances more carefully conducted than at this university. Queen's stands as high in the conduct of social functions as it does in academic affairs generally. Its social festivities are under the patronage of the senate, the wives of the staff and the student body and these are the best in the land."
