AFTER SIX.
By ELEANOR GUNN

The Paris openings always add new zest and interest to the subject of fashions, just at a time when it is becoming a bit threadbare. This year, the critics seem delighted with what has been featured, and laud the wearability of the models in general.

The great innovation is the appearance of the Directoire line, and this feature is the only one regarded with any misgivings as to its success. It is, however, only attempted for evening. The basic idea of the moment appears to be to look quite unlike your daytime self by night. For daywear, tailored lines and a most painstaking neatness and restraint in ornamentation are desired, while for evening we may be as picturesque as we wish, so why not the raised waistline if your figure can stand it? Juggling the waistline has been one of fashion's tricks practiced so long, that she is expert in the matter.

A charming apricot taffeta evening gown with full skirt worn at a recent smart dinner dance, had three widely spaced rows of box pleated frayed taffeta ribbons in a harmonizing wood tone. A ribbon ruche about four inches in width outlined the small armholes, extending in a horseshoe curve almost to the waist at the back.

Evening dresses are so similar in most cases that an unusual detail registers instantly. White velvet has many sponsors mostly among women who have had more than they want of beads. Yet beads sparkle from almost every gown one meets, the favorite types being crystal bugles, pearl beads and rhinestones, with an occasional small colored type in a conventional flower design on satin.

One such model meeting with great success is on straight chemise lines with small flowers in multi-colored beads scattered over its surface. Outlining brocades or striped silk with beads is another novel treatment.

Bob's Lake Notes.
Bob's Lake, April 2.—To-day's snowstorm has somewhat marred the beautiful spring weather we have been getting. A few farmers have had the pleasure of another sleigh-ride. James Hickey has sold a horse to William Reynolds, Crow Lake. Frank Kelly made a trip to Mud Bay. Miss Charlotte Hickey and Mrs. John Hickey spent a day at B. C. Atwood's. James Fitzgerald, Canoe Lake, is visiting at T. Fitzgerald's. Jack and Edward Fitzgerald and William Hickey have gone to work on the railway. Visitors: Mrs. T. Fitzgerald and son, Edward, at Michael Kelly's; George Currie, James Hickey and William Reynolds and father, Crow Lake, at B. C. Atwood's; John Murphy, Mass Road, at Thomas Hickey's.
