REDISCOVERY OF THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

Say what they will against him, old Judge Gary gets along with the closed shop, because he has learned to be particular about the plumb line. Whatever the shortcomings of his corporation, in days ago, the fighting unions, which he would not accept, at least have forced him to a course of rectitude.

Co-operation, or team play, demands respect for authority equally from those above and those below, not for the good of a class, but for the good of the whole community. The majesty of law is a recognized essential of a stable state. Any tampering here is a disruptive force at the very core of society.

Viewed apart from its moral aspect, the conduct of the Steel Corporation of Newfoundland was a tactical error. At this moment, capital is fighting with its back to the wall. In countries where the capitalistic system has not fallen, it is being challenged on every hand.

Let the capitalist of smirk, smug satisfaction regard the rise of socialism as a tangible proof that we are in the midst of a time of testing. Above all things, at such a time, it behooves capital to justify itself by its integrity.

There never was a period when it was harder for the man higher up to command respect than now. How then can he hope for that respect if he does not merit it?

The Germans laid down their arms on November 11th, 1918. But the warfare between capital and labor still goes on.

For shallow-pated, half-baked partisans the result of the industrial struggle is certain. For those who will not obfuscate the issue, the result is, anything else but certain.

At present, I am not persuaded that the stars in their course are fighting either with Mr. Wolvin, or with Mr. MacLaughlin.

In the midst of uncertainties, however, there is one thing that I am sure of, and that is that the British Empire Steel Corporation gave comfort to their enemy when they committed themselves to a course of bribery and corruption.

The directors of a corporation cannot acquiesce to an evil course and then hope to escape from the wages of sin.

Carlyle says, "You can't build a stone wall without the ten commandments." It is upon the principles of the Decalogue alone that capital and labor can come to common standing ground. This may sound simple in statement, but the hypocrisy and sham, of which our dominion has its due share, renders the application far from easy.

If, in days to come, capital makes contracts to keep them; if labor makes contracts only to regard them as "scraps of paper," it requires no special perspicacity, to tell which shall prevail. Character in the long run must be the decisive factor in the struggle.

In talks with Mr. Harriman I often heard him deplore the fact that the family feeling of mutual trust had departed from our industrial relations. The old gentleman at the head of the works, with the soul of honor, is a rebuke to many a soulless corporation.

No speed-boy banker can juggle with the ten commandments. The law of gravity is no respecter of persons; it will smash the crooked chairman of the board just as impartially as it will smash the sneaking agitator.

Did we learn anything in the war? Or, are we to continue as blind after Armageddon as before?

Why did the Canadian line hold against overwhelming odds during the first gas attack at Ypres?

Our line held because of the force of immutable and unchanging law. As Canada's anniversaries of her great battle days return, she is not so much in need of boastful talk on deeds of valor. She needs rather to keep in silent remembrance that reign of law which it was her privilege to fight for, and which, in peace, it is still her privilege to maintain.

KIPLING'S INSCRIPTION
For the Soldier's Monument at Sault Ste. Marie.

"To the Glory of God: the honour of the Armies of the Dominion, and in proud memory of our dead who fell in the Great War, 1914-18; and whose names are here recorded, this Monument was erected by the people of Sault Ste. Marie."

"From little towns in a far land we came, To save our honour and a world a fame; By little towns, in a far land, we sleep, And trust those things we won to you to keep."

Sault Ste Marie Star.
The above inscription was written for the Sault Soldiers' Monument in reply to the following letter:
Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., April 3rd, 1924.

Mr. Rudyard Kipling,
Care of the London Times, London, England.

Dear Sir,—The citizens of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, Canada, are erecting a monument to the 350 townsmen who fell in the great war,—the best boys we had. We would deeply appreciate it if you would write for us a verse or thought to go on the face of the monument, or indicate something which you would think suitable.

You will be interested in knowing that in the first four months of the war, 1,500 of our boys offered for enlistment,—nearly one-tenth of our population then. We sent 120 men off within two weeks of the outbreak of war, and followed this up by three other drafts. Then our own 119th and 227th Battalions followed in due course. Many Algoma men also served with other corps.

As you know, we are on the St. Mary's river between Lakes Huron and Superior,—a border town of 20,000. Algoma is a very sparsely settled district in "New Ontario" yet in the pioneer stage.

If you feel you could comply with our request it would, I am sure, be greatly appreciated by the fathers and mothers of our absent boys.

Sincerely yours,
JAMES W. CURRAN.

There is a touch of inspiration about Mr. Kipling's inscription. But what will lend the Sault's symbol of remembrance distinction will be the fact that it will be the only monument in America so honored by the greatest literary genius of the empire. Curious visitors will want to see the monument for which Kipling wrote an original inscription, while to Sault fathers and mothers the fact that the author of "The Recessional" paid personal tribute to their absent boys will be a consolation.
