The Camper's Lunch-Box Set

CONSTRUCTIONAL DETAILS

When you have got all the instruments of our "lunch-box" placed correctly, you can start in to wire up. Now is the time for you to take the wiring diagram we printed in the Tuesday issue, and with this near you, proceed to the wiring. Bare bus bar is most decidedly not recommended, because the parts are so close that bare wire would result in "shorts" in all probability. Even if the wires themselves did not come in contact with each other, it is probable that the wires would touch the sides of the tin container, and "short" through the metal box. If bus bar is used, it should be covered with spaghetti or rubber tubing. Annunciator, or bell wire, is also very good, and is perhaps the easiest to handle. It does not make as pretty a job as the busbar, but it is much easier to work with, and the double contact insulation is a pretty safe guarantee against short circuits by accidental contact.

The set is, as stated, a conventional regenerative set and one-stage amplifier, in which one variometer is used as the tuner, and the other as the plate regenerator. Ten turns of No. 26 d.c.c. wire are wound on the stator of the first variometer for the antenna coil. In connecting up the binding posts, connect the antenna and ground to the first two posts. Then connect the two "A" battery terminals to two of the three center posts. The odd post is a dummy, and is placed on the set to hold one of the "A" battery leads when the set is not in use. Since we have no rheostat, and since there is no room for a filament switch, we must turn off the filament by disconnecting one lead. If this were left to hang around in the box, it might short-circuit on the other "A" battery wire, so we have a dummy post to connect it to.

The "A" battery supply consists of two No. 232 Burgess-batteries, but may be any of the three-cell flashlight batteries, or even two two-cell. These have leads soldered to each end. The end with the flat zinc bottom is the "negative" end, and the end with the little round contact surrounded by wax is the "positive" end. Both "positive" wires from the two batteries are run to the "positive" post; and both "negatives" are run to the "negative" post on the panel—in other words the batteries are put in parallel.

To keep the cells from slipping out of the cardboard containers, it is a good idea to put adhesive tape over the ends, as shown in "A" and "B" in Fig. 2. Also, to keep the batteries from "shorting" on the metal end of the box, a piece of cardboard is cut and fitted into one end of the top, as shown in Fig. 1. Holes, are punched in the lid of the box, and the batteries are held in place by wires running through the top of the lid.

As we mentioned before, there is room enough in the top to hold two single phones without headband, or a coil of No. 22 wire for an antenna. This little receiver is not super-efficient, but it is conveniently portable, and we hope will meet with approval. Used in Hartford, Conn., stations in Chicago, Washington, D.C., St. Louis, Schenectady and Cleveland were brought in with good audibility on the first test.

True Worship.
Not been to church for years, you say,
My dear, you are quite, quite wrong, I go to church every blessed day, And at twilight to evensong.

Where did I go this sabbath morn?
To the chapel down by the hill
Where old Mother Nature her children adorn
And they're not always warned to sit still.

The church, which stood at the foot of the hill,
Had a canopy roof of green;
Forming an arch overhead until
The sunbeams were checked between.

The mountains towered on every side,
And formed the cathedral wall
While the carpet of thick green moss defied
The echo of human foot-fall.

The worshippers had for seats the ferns,
Standing row on row so even,
While the choir of bird-voices chanted the "unes"
Of God and His love and Heaven.

The preacher was dressed in a coat of black
But I saw some women frown,
Because he'd forgot on his white cravat
And his shoes were a russet brown.

But never-the-less, 'twas a service of Praise
To the Father of Truth and Love
Who sends us sunshine and golden days
To prepare for service above.
—Georgiana Miller, Picton.
