Now, let's all get down to the business of making a living.

In a big town you can conceal your meanness from everybody except Heaven and the bellhop.

"Home is woman's sphere' means gad about as much as you will it you won't earn money.

If June brides didn't rely on the calendar they might not know when the wedding day comes.

Middle class people are those who are not tempted by a used car unless it is a good paint job.

In the old days a lodge ring per suaded the banker to make you the loan; now a golf bag does it. London society women are "up to Nature is kind, and people get over mumps and measles and things before they come to matrimony.

The wild son may go to the dogs. But the nice one may remain at home and learn to play the saxophone.

It is estimated that 87 per cent. of the mail shricks an invitation for one or other party to the connubia somebody to throw it in a waste basket.

As a rule, a "brilliant" youth is age home. one who has learned to believe in standards that will get him into trouble.

The feeling that makes you resent a "No Admittance" sign may be democracy, but more probably it curiosity.

Another thing hard to understand ly is why a tire that is fixing to blow out knows just when you have on white pants.

Correct this sentence: "If you don't mind," said he to the boss, "I'd rather not have my name on the glass door."

If the groom dances divinely and has nice shiny hair, the young people will make their home with the bride's parents.

A resort is a place where everybody's attitude indicates the belief that you are a small-town clerk trying to conceal it.

In these decadent times a king doesn't have much to do except give his blessing to the faction that happens to be on top.

In every nation there are people ignorant enought to be inflamed by another nation's policy that doesn't mean anything to them.

The Forgotten Man.

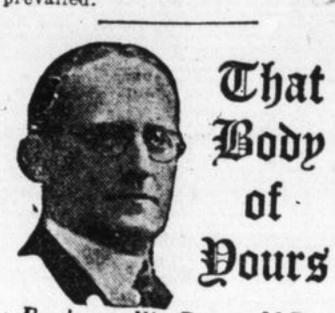

"The tendency is to impose burdens too heavy to bear upon the ordinary citizen, 'the forgotten man, who, toiling quietly at home, seeks water, are almost completely in acno favors, but asks only friendly protection of a government that is just and fair."-Theodore Burton Cleveland Convention. Who is to look after the interests of "the forgotten man?" Who is to protect him from the encroachments of greedy minorities? Who is to defend him when his interests are menaced by frenzied radicals seeking to destroy the government to which he owes his security and from intellectual anarchists who have been aptly termed moral idiots? In truth, "the forgotten man" is one who forgets his own interests; who neglects to exercise the right of suffrage. stays at home on election day, if he has not, indeed, forgotten to register. Mr. Burton very truly said that if "the forgotten man" does not rouse himself to combat the tendency of the politicians and greedy special groups and interests to impose crushing tax burdens upon him "we shall become a people abounding in preferred classes, the burden of whose privileges must rest with crushing weight upon the great body of our citizenship."-Los Angeles Times.

Music and the Tombs of Kings.

From the Valley of the Kings in upper Egypt, where exploration of the recently discovered tomb of Tutankhamen has been yielding new revelations of the culture as well as the power of the Pharaohs, may yet come some monumental disclosure for the musical historian. Press dispatches from Luxor, describing daily the objects removed from the tomb, and brought to the light of day after four thousand years, have had a few references to musical instruments, fifes, harps, and cimbals, as among the objects thus uncovered. "Evidently," ran one line of comment, "the king was musical."

That Egypt was the musical schoolmaster of the ancient world is conceded by all who have traced the art back through the centuries. The Jews in their period of bondage sat at the feet of the musicians of the Nile, and learned much of what was later brought to flowering in the time of Solomon and the Temple, when 4,000 As mentioned before, when the musicians participated in ritualistic that the women officers can do in- walls get hard, fibrous tissue taking services. In fact the instruments used has long been the women officers it may be said you have heard the expression that known, not only from ancient carvings that their work is wholly preventive the arteries were like "pipe stems" in but from examination of the instruments themselves.

As to the nature of the music sung world to prevent hard arteries is to and played in the dawning of history eat less food, and to take enough there can be only conjecture, guided somewhat by the traditional airs of the Jews, and some other music believed to be of the ancient East. So far as research has been able to establish, musical notation was unknown and melodies were passed on from individual to individual, and from memory to memory. This is difficult to reconcile with the advancement and the high intelligence of the Egyptians. Scientists and art experts at the tomb of Tutankhamen have been particularly impressed by the utility, as well as the beauty of objects unearthed there recently, and have become convinced that Egyptian civilization reached its zenith much earlier than has been recognized.

If, in the course of further delving, one written phrase of Egyptian music can be found and deciphered, the discovery will be one of far more significance and world profit than the uncovering of another mummy of another king, the probability now excit- the extent to which the stones are ing the tourists who, it is said, are crowding the hotels at Luxor. Cause of Hail.

Hail is precipitation occurring in the form of more or less spherical balls of ice, showing a typical concentric structure when cut open, like the layers of an onion. Hailstones vary in size from tiny pellets to large balls or disks, two, three or even four inches in diameter. The size depends both on the intensity of the hail-producing conditions, and melted in falling to the ground. A hailstorm is essentially an intense thunderstorm. The storm must furnish a sufficiently powerful ascending curent to carry drops of water or small balls of wet snow to a height where the air is cold enough to freeze them. The concentric structure of hailstones suggests repeated accretions and freezing, as if the stone has been carried up and then dropped and carried up again several times. Large hail stones may show seven or eight layers around a central core, and some with 20 to 25 layers have fallen. Great thunderstorm clouds include the necessary strong up-draft and turbulent air currents required for hail formation. Futhermore, measurements of the height of these clouds in the warm season show that their tops tower well up into freez-
