PLACES TO LOOK FOR TROUBLE

Shooting Trouble in Your Radio Set

One of the most difficult things in the world to do satisfactorily is to "doctor" an ailing radio set from a distance by correspondence. If you have a set that won't operate as it should, by some friend who knows the game pretty well and have him look over the outfit, because anybody can find out more in five minutes by personal inspection than can be found out by half a dozen letters.
 Now although it will be best, if your set persistently refuses to work, to call in somebody who is qualified to locate the trouble, there are several things you can do yourself which may turn up the difficulty. In our drawing we have shown places to look for trouble.
 Readers have been cautioned many, many times to look at the socket springs for the location of trouble, but they still insist on overlooking this feature of their sets. Just because the tube, when put into the socket, lights up, is no reason that the contacts are O. K. The grid or plate contacts may be "missing fire." Bend them up once in a while. And don't forget to scrape or file the tube contacts fairly often. Dirty contacts are a sure source of noise.
 One of the most common complaints is that the set "won't oscillate." If you have a 180-degree coupler, try reversing the tickler connections. This will often remedy the difficulty. Reversing tickler connections in other types of variocouplers is advised, too, if the rotor has stops to prevent it from turning completely around.
 Another thing to look for if the set won't oscillate, is to make sure, unless you have a Reinartz set, that you have a .001-mfd. bypass condenser across the phones and "B" battery of the detector tube, particularly if you are using an audio amplifier. Such a condenser is not necessary in a Reinartz set.
 Audio amplifier howls may often be cured by reversing the primary or secondary connections on the transformers.
 Noise in a set is more often caused by poor contacts than it is by "noisy" batteries. Look at the variocoupler connections, the condenser contacts, and all battery connections, and make sure everything is tight. The safest thing to do is to "pig-tail" all variocoupler, variometer and condenser movable connections.
 The grid condenser and leak should be the best you can get. Cheap instruments at this point will invariably result in noise and uncertain operation. If your set has a habit of oscillating erratically, the grid condenser and leak are among the first things to be looked into.
 Phone jacks deserve especial attention. Above all things, do NOT allow soldering flux to get smeared over the jack terminals. In an actual test, a jack whose terminals had been treated with hot acid flux showed a resistance of about half a megohm. In other words, the jack was a good grid leak, but a poor jack, because the comparatively low resistance would by-pass a good deal of the energy, and noise and weaker signals resulted.
 Reverse the diaphragms of your phones once in a while.
 Test your batteries frequently. Dead batteries will not give good results.

 Harrowsmith, June 26.—A well-known and esteemed resident passed away early on Wednesday morning, in the person of John Tallent, who died at his residence after a lingering illness of several months of cancer of the stomach. Mr. Tallent was sixty-six years of age; in religion he was a Free Methodist and a member of that church. He was a staunch Conservative in his early days, but a few years previous to his demise took very little part in politics. Surviving are his wife, two sons and two daughters, Mrs. Harry Walker, Harrowsmith; Mrs. Coon, Clayton, N.Y.; Fred Tallent, on the farm, and Frank, at home.
