MAY PREVENT GIRL FROM COMING BACK

Question Arises Over the Case of Kingston Couple at Dayton, Ohio.

A despatch to the Whig from Cleveland, Ohio, on Wednesday, says: Miss Margaret Tweedley, aged 19, of Kingston, Ont., whose present residence is the jail at Dayton, Ohio, near here, will be granted her liberty soon, and the governments of the United States and Canada are in a quandary as to what to do with her. Miss Tweedley had been detained with George Tryon, aged thirty-nine, married of Kingston, Canada, on June 23rd, United States District Judge Hickenlooper sentenced Tryon to jail for thirty days for violating the international white slave act. Miss Tweedley likewise was sent to the Dayton, Ohio jail.

United States immigration Inspector Thomas planned to have Miss Tweedley released first, and inasmuch as he had arranged for her deportation to her home at Kingston, Canada, he thought to send her safely on her way to that country before Tryon would be released. However, according to a letter received by Inspector Thomas from Mrs. Edward Tweedley, the mother of the young woman, the Canadian authorities have decided to prevent Miss Tweedley from re-entering Canada.

"Oh, what to do," sighed Inspector Thomas, as he grappled with the problem.

GIRL GUIDES' CAMP AT BEAU RIVAGE ENDS

The Kiwanians Furnished Cars to Carry the Girls Back to Kingston.

Reveille sounding an hour earlier than usual Tuesday morning rudely awakened the girls to the fact that their delightful holiday on Beau Rivage Island was over and that it was time to fold tents and depart. Many were the expressions of regret heard on all sides. So quickly and pleasantly had the time passed that the Guides could scarcely realize that their two weeks' stay was over. However, everyone submitted to the inevitable and before long the camping ground was strewn with a heterogeneous mass of bags, blankets, ground sheets, kit bags, valises, etc.

Staff Sergeants Kelly and Parks arrived at an early hour and soon the business of striking tents was under way.

The Kiwanians had again kindly furnished cars to convey the Guides back to the city, and by ten o'clock the boats were plying back and forth to the mainland, carrying the Guides. In their natty blue uniforms they looked very trim and smart, a ruddy coat of tan adding to their attractiveness.

Lieuts. Edith Allard, Jessie MacIver and Lottie Timms, with the nurse, Miss Todd, accompanied the girls, while the commandant, Miss Yerna Saunders, Lieut. Kathleen Healey, Cadets Rhoda Hayward and Yerna Vanluven and Mrs. Revell remained behind to look after the transportation of luggage, etc. Capt. Mary Ogilvie had been obliged to leave before, preceding the campers to the city on Saturday. Mr. Powell went down in his motor launch for the equipment and luggage, and at 6.30 bade "Good-Bye" to Beau Rivage.

The camp of 1924 will be remembered with pleasure by everyone, as one of the most successful and pleasant that has been held on the island.

A most admirable spirit prevailed through the whole camp, from the cook, Mrs. Moroughan, who labored from dawn till dark cheerfully striving to feed such a hungry brood, to "Bones," the camp mascot, who was always on hand to rouse the lagging spirits of anyone threatened with inertia.

Everyone was ready to do her part to make the stay enjoyable and the result was a fortnight of healthy sport and delightful pleasure to all.

A BOARDING HOUSE MYSTERY IN COURT

"Who Put Bottle of Whiskey in Cupboard?" is the Question.

"The Boarding House Mystery, Or Who Put the Bottle of Whiskey in the Kitchen Cupboard?"

The above is a suitable title for a story that was unfolded in the police court on Wednesday morning, when a citizen who keeps a boarding house, was charged with having liquor in a place other than a private dwelling. He pleaded "not guilty" to the charge.

Sergeant Marshall Armstrong told of having a search warrant for the premises. With Constable William Fitzgerald he paid a visit to the boarding house shortly after midnight on Saturday. But it was not like the case of Mother Hubbard finding the cupboard bare; far from it. The officers looked into the cupboard and there they located a bottle of whiskey. The bottle had been opened and three or four drinks had been taken from it.

But how did the bottle of whiskey get into the cupboard? This is the question. The accused went into the box in his own behalf and when asked how the liquor got into the cupboard he said: "It is more than I can tell." The bottle might have been put in the cupboard by some person who came into the house, but the accused could throw no light on the mystery. The police could not furnish any clue and as the magistrate was unable to solve the mystery, he enlarged the case for two days, in order to give the accused time to secure more evidence. The accused was very anxious to have the case enlarged, stating that if given time he thought he would be able to find out some information regarding how the bottle came to be in his cupboard.

A good deal of mystery surrounded the case of a couple of tipplers gathered in on Tuesday morning. Both had a rambling story about driving around the city and the surrounding country in a car; about drinking extract of lemon in Nanawee and some two per cent. beer in Kingston. They denied having had any real liquor, but the magistrate was not satisfied with their story so enlarged the case for a day.
