Guarding Against Microphonic Noises in Your Set.

Before the present-day tubes were developed comparatively little trouble was experienced with "microphonic" noises in the receiving circuits, but with the present tubes, such as the WD-11, WD-12, UV-199, and UV-201-A considerable trouble is encountered which can be traced to the tubes themselves, and it pays the listener, in the interests of quiet operation, to take steps to prevent shocks from reaching the tubes.
The microphonic noises, so-called, are caused by the vibration of the elements in the tube resulting from a shock.
If you have a set completely built and wish to reduce the noises referred to without tearing the set to pieces, the easiest way is to adopt the method depicted in Fig. 3. Here we have placed rubber sponges under the set, using one at each corner. This arrangement will be a very noticeable help, but will not entirely solve the problem, because although the set is insulated from shocks from the table on which the receiver is placed, it is still just about as sensitive as ever to any blows against the cabinet itself. In other words, as long as you don't hit the receiver cabinet, you will not be troubled particularly with microphonic noise, but if you should happen to strike the cabinet it is probable that interference will be created.
The only satisfactory arrangement from all standpoints is to mount each individual socket on some sort of elastic resilient base.
In Figs. 1 and 2 we have shown the wrong and right way to go about this. Fig. 1 is so obviously the wrong method that it hardly seems worth while taking the trouble to mention it, but many people have fastened sockets this way thinking that it would insulate the tube from shocks. Obviously it will not, because the socket is connected rigidly to the base by means of the screws, and the sponge underneath serves no real purpose.
Fig. 2 is the correct way. Before placing the socket in the set fasten a rubber sponge to the base. The best way to do this is to tie it on with thread by using a needle, running it down through the mounting hole in the socket, through the sponge, out at the bottom, and around up the outside. Pull the two ends of the thread together and tie.
In mounting the sponge to the base, a simple way is to simply glue it on. However, if this does not work well, you can easily run a screw down the opening in the tube socket, and screw through the sponge into the wooden base, as shown in Fig. 2.

The report grew out of a resolution by L. J. Ladner (Conservative, South Vancouver) calling for the establishment of such account, but this was amended by agreement to provide for the study of the plan by the Government.

Lay Eggs for Friendly Scouts.
Ottawa, July 17.—A mud turtle that was kindly treated by members of the 37th Woodroffe Boys Scout Troop at Fitzroy Harbor last summer showed its faith in the Scouts by returning to their camp this year. Patrol Leader Peraggo found one yesterday, laying eggs near the camp fire. On close examination he discovered that it was the same one that he had caught last summer, when he carved his initials and date on its hard shell.
Drives Pick Through Foot.
Belleville, July 17.—Harry Graves, working on the Albion street sewer, drove the point of the pick-axe he was handling through his right foot when the upper arm of the pick struck the wall of the trench and the course of the implement was deflected.
