THREE-PIECE OUTFIT

This very effective three-piece outfit copies the most attractive features of the peasant costume and combines them with the best lines of Paris.

The gown is a simple straight-line affair with a low waistline and a pleated skirt. The long coat is much more elaborate. The pleats are held in at the waistline and hemline by bands of embroidery which keep the lines very straight.

A collar of white rabbit fur softens the neckline and adds the bit of protection that even a summer coat should afford. The material is white crepe de chine and the embroidery is in shades of blue and orange.

The Editor hears

That Lady Diana Cooper, the Britannia whose out-thrown arms led the great assemblage in song, was a lovely finale to the gloriously colorful pageant at the Heart of Empire Ball, held in London's famous Albert Hall.

Lady Diana was borne in, standing on a small stage carried by six men. Attempts had been made to persuade her to adopt the familiar enthroned position, lest she should be unable to maintain the pose so long on her rather unsteady ground. But her confidence in herself was not misplaced and her marvellous balance was commented on by everyone.

Mrs. Fred Beardmore, of Montreal, represented Canada in the pageant.

That the Woman's Institute corner at the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto will be one of most interesting, not only to women but to men to whom it will bring realization of the farm woman's part the development of Canada.

That "one hundred women in congress" is the cry sent up at Washington by the National Women's Party—which is not, as the name implies, a feminine political sect, and doesn't care to which party you belong as long as you boost women's causes. And their slogan, "Women for Congress," seems likely to replace the famous "Votes for women" of the suffrage campaign some ten years ago.

That the beautiful hollyhocks just coming into bloom were in many places damaged by the severe storm of Thursday and the roses just at the end of the summer bloom had their lovely petals blow washed away.

That the country looks as lovely as it does in June. Clover is still in blossom and although St. Johnsworth and blue chicory with a few first blossoms of golden rod are to be seen and there is no hint of August in the green fields.

That a New York note says the newer bead bags to-day seem to be in softer and often in darker shades. One of them, in navy and dark green with a dash of dark red, is just the thing to carry with a navy crepe de chine costume that has a touch of embroidery in these colors.

The Care of Brass
There is nothing that looks less attractive than a tarnished brass ornament. Different brass objects require different care.

Antique Brass, for instance, requires polishing with powdered rottenstone which has been mixed to a paste with a little paraffin oil.

Old Banares Brass, on the other hand, which is lacquered with gold, should never be scoured. Instead, apply a paste of lemon juice and cream of tartar, letting it stand on the Banares Brass for five minutes and then washing off with warm water and drying with a soft cloth.

Brass Faucets and Doorknobs may be rubbed with a paste of paraffin oil and powdered bath brick followed by an application of the powdered bath brick alone (dry on a cloth), then polished with a clean chamcha. Or, if old and rough, this variety of brass may be polished with any sand soap.

Lacquering Brass to Prevent from Tarnishing: Apply a thin coat of lacquer (which any hardware store will sell you) after you polish the brass. The polish shows through the coat of lacquer, thus always keeping bright. I know of housewives who received brass candlesticks and other ornaments for wedding gifts and who immediately lacquered them—thereby making it unnecessary to polish the ornaments at all. When the coat of lacquer wears off, simply give them another coat.

To Make Brass Look Like Bronze: Some women change their brasses into what appears to be bronze as follows: They rub them once a week, or oftener, with a piece of flannel moistened with any light oil such as that used for sewing machines; the metal gradually darkens under this treatment and thereafter requires no polishing.

To Make an Old Brass Bed into a White Enamel One: Brass beds, too, should be lacquered to keep the polish from tarnishing, but when a bed has never been lacquered and its brass is worn through from many polishings, it is often better to apply white enamel over the brass rather than send the bed to a brass foundry to have a new coat of brass put on.

This is how to apply the enamel: Remove lacquer (if it has any on) by scrubbing with strong soda water (one tablespoon of washing soda to one quart of hot water or denaturing alcohol), then roughen the surface by brushing over with muriatic acid (a poison) or else by rubbing with coarse sandpaper. (If the acid is used it should be afterward washed off and the rags burned.) Apply three coats of flat paint and two of enamel. Smooth all but the final coat with number 00 sandpaper to remove brush marks.

Fripperies And Frivolities

By ELEANOR GUNN

The prolonged rainy season, with its necessity for carrying an umbrella, has given us—when the sun shines—a fine training for wielding a parasol. Parasols, for a time, became almost obsolete, but, like most things which were successes of other years, they have returned. Curiously enough their reentry takes place at a time when the world is assumed to be under masculine sway—at least the sartorial world. Yet what is more feminine than a parasol. Perhaps the answer is a fan; but that is the one exception.

Also, curiously enough, at a time when "Directoire" is on everyone's tongue, the most approved parasols have handles as short and as thick as a club. The tall slender Directoire cane has little in common with the sturdy walking stick the model girl swings as she sets forth on a cross-country hike.

From the decorative and delightful colored Japanese umbrellas carried on smart beaches, to the beruffled silks is a far cry. There seems to be nothing omitted; everything seems to be possible in parasols. The one sketched is an intricate combination of shirred silk and a printed silk handkerchief in bold Chinese design, in perfect accord, of course, with a handle of ebony and carved ivory.

The Oriental note is sounded in so much one wears just now that one is confident of coming upon it in costume jewelry as in other accessories. There

You Can't Be Younger Than Your Nerves

That "Old-age Feeling" Comes From Tired, Starved, Frazzeled Nerves—Not Age.

You die when your nerves die. Time doesn't tell the story. You feel as old as your nerves. That tired, exhausted, fagged-out, feeling means a slowing up of your organs, stagnation of your circulation, gradual loss of nerve strength. If overwork, worry, grief or the strain of life sap your nerves, they lie down and make life miserable for you, because they are starved and frazzled. They cry out in your sensitive stomach—pain, indigestion, sick nausea, loss of appetite, gas, bloating. They drag on your willing heart for more strength—palpitation, faintness, shortness of breath, smothering sensations. They wrack your poor head to warn you—headaches, dizziness, depressed, restless, can't hold yourself, can't sleep. Aches, pains and queer feelings with fancy names like—neuritis, neurasthenia, neuralgia and neuritis, prevail around. But it is your nerves. Pain is the cry of starved or injured nerves.

Celebrated His Birthday.

Consecon, July 23.—The United Sunday school picnic was held at the Beach on Saturday afternoon. Consecon, Salem and North Lakeside were all represented. Rev. Mr. Seymour, Rednersville, preached in the Methodist church on Sunday evening. Charles G. Fox celebrated his birthday on the 21st inst. A three-storey birthday cake with figures "59" was a reminder of the occasion. There are several summer visitors in the village. Mrs. (Dr.) Hellwell and four children arrived on Monday afternoon and are living in Dr. Fielding's house. Mrs. T. Spencer is visiting at Mrs. R. Zuffel's. Mrs. C. C. Wannamaker and also Campbell and Ruth were recent visitors at her father's, C. G. Fox.

New Discovery Makes Superfluous Hair Leave (Roots and All) Quickly Depart.

As hair or fuzz on the face is such an embarrassing thing, every woman so afflicted will welcome the information that these disfigurements now can be completely removed—roots and all—in the privacy of one's own home, without the assistance of an expert. The new method will astonish and delight you. You never saw or heard of anything like it before. It is not a depilatory and not electrical. Just get a stick of phalactin from your druggist and follow the simple directions. In a jiffy you have removed the offending hairs completely. With your own eyes you see the roots come out. Phalactin is absolutely harmless, non-poisonous and odorless.
