DISPOSING OF SURPLUS COCKERELS.

To obtain the best results in rearing, the separation of the cockerels and pullets into two flocks should be carried out as soon as the sex can be detected. This is a simple matter with the light breeds, the cockerels of which develop distinctive characters at an early stage. With a little practice it is also comparatively easy to distinguish a large proportion of the heavy-breed cockerels quite early.

Squab Broilers.

The size at which cockerels may best be marketed depends on the season. In May and early June there is a good demand in the larger cities for squab broilers, that is cockerels weighing a pound to a pound and a quarter. Such birds, in good condition, will bring 75c. to $1.25 each. As the season advances a weight of a pound and a half to two pounds is demanded, and the price per pound gradually lowers. The price for such birds, however, has not gone below 50c. for several years until August, when the supply becomes considerably greater.

Demand is for More Weight in Fall.

After August there is not much sale for broilers weighing under two pounds and the preference is for chicks weighing between two and a half and three pounds. These birds are known in the trade as "frys." The price for these varies considerably, but it is seldom that a three-pound cockerel will bring more in August or September than a pound-bird in May. It costs considerably more to rear the three-pound bird. Thus it pays to market the surplus young cockerels as soon as possible. There is another economic advantage in selling of the cockerel as early as possible. It leaves more room for the pullets to thrive and grow in.

Leghorns Make Best Broilers.

No breed of poultry make better broilers than Leghorns. The young cockerels carry more breast meat at this early age than do the cockerels of the heavier breeds. This is particularly true if the birds are well fed. The heavy breeds, as a rule, are difficult to "plump out," or fatten, until they are nearing maturity. On the other hand, Leghorns make poor heavy broilers or roasters. They do not compare with Rocks, Wyandottes, or Reds in this respect.

Caponizing Economical.

When it is not convenient to dispose of cockerels as squab broilers or frys, they should be caponized. This is quite a simple operation, and a large flock can be sexed in a few hours. When so operated upon, the birds become very docile, and on the same feed will grow considerably heavier than will cockerels and their flesh will be much more desirable quality. (Full instructions on laid,

Special Feeding Before Killing.

The practice of dry feeding the growing chickens is becoming more and more prevalent. There is no better way of feeding them for growth, normal development, and fecundity. But this method makes it entirely necessary that, before killing, the cockerels should receive a short period of special feeding on wet mash. This greatly improves the edibility of their flesh. If it is not convenient to crate feed them, they should be put in restricted quarters, and for a day or two given but one feed of wet mash, increasing this thereafter to three feeds. Give the birds all they will eat up in twenty minutes.

The mash should be composed of oats, wheat and corn, equal parts, ground very fine, and mixed to a thin batter with buttermilk or sour skim milk.

Questions on This Week's Lesson.

1. What is a squab broiler?
2. When does it pay best to market surplus cockerels?
3. What are the advantages of caponizing?
4. Is it necessary to specially feed cockerels before killing for market?

Answers to Last Week's Questions.

1. It is not correct to refer to a Barred Plymouth Rock as a breed. Barred Plymouth Rock is a variety name of one branch of the Plymouth Rock breed.
2. The term "White Leghorn" refers to a variety of the Leghorn breed. Therefore the sentence should read: The White Leghorn variety is considered to be a splendid "egg machine."
3. Breed is distinguished by shape, never by color. There are several breeds which have varieties that are wholly white in plumage, such as White Plymouth Rocks, White Wyandottes, White Leghorns and White Minorcas. If plumage color denoted the breed, all these would have to be classed as belonging to the one breed, whereas they belong to four distinct breeds, as denoted by their shape.
4. Yes. The color of the hen's ear lobes denotes the color of shell on the eggs she produces. A hen with a white ear lobe lays a white-shelled egg and a hen with a red ear lobe lays a brown-shelled egg. A tinted or mixed colored lobe varies the pigmentation in the shell of the egg.

7%
First Mortgage 20-Year Sinking Fund Gold Bonds

They are intrinsically safe because they are part of a first mortgage, representing only 57 1/2% of the appraised valuation on the new 21-story fireproof office building now in course of erection in the heart of Toronto's business district.

They pay the attractive rate of 7%—a splendid return when the safety of these bonds is considered. They offer complete freedom from care, responsibility and management.

They are free from the effects of labor trouble, economic changes and Governmental regulations.

Real estate bonds are not subject to violent market fluctuations. The equity back of the bonds increases each year through the operation of a sinking fund.

They afford the opportunity to invest either large or small amounts—bonds being issued in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000.

These securities—sound first mortgage bonds, returning a full 7% interest—represent one of the most conservative and increasingly popular forms of investment. We strongly recommend these bonds for conservative investment.

THE CUMBERLAND
 Magnificent chrysalis,
 Once Mistress of the Seal
 No living vessel ever flung
 A person to the breeze;
 No bark e'er died a death so grand;
 Such heroes never vessel manned;
 Your parting broadside broke the waves
 That surged above your patriot grave,
 Your flag, the gem of the game,
 Sank proudly with you—not in shame,
 But in its ancient glory,
 The memory of its parting gleam
 Will never fade while poets dream;
 The echo of your dying gun
 Will last till man has race has run—
 Then live an Angel Story.
