That the police ask citizens who are troubled with people begging at the door to phone them. This is a wise precaution for it is never the most needy or the most deserving poor who beg from door to door for money, food or clothing. We have several poor relief organizations and the V. O. N. who are constantly requiring assistance to meet the demands made on them.

That Wolfe Island had a splendid school fair on Monday, and the prize winners will have their exhibits in the big school tent at the Fair Grounds all the rest of the week. The school tent is always one of the best arranged and most interesting on the grounds. The town children should all see it, just to have an idea what their country cousins can do.

That the city is already filling up for the fair. M. A.: "Could you tell me how to remove a burnt spot from a light-colored silk crepe dress?" Answer: If it is really a burnt spot, I fear there is nothing to be done, as even slight scorching weakens the fibers of silks and woolsens, and gives them a tendency to break; but when not too deep they may be treated by wetting at once with glycerine and letting it remain for an hour before washing out; or by rubbing very lightly with a piece of white flannel wrung dry out of cold water and slightly moistened with glycerine. You might try this now. Glycerine stains can be sponged out with alcohol.

Mrs. M. R. In reply to question asked by K. B. A.: "I had a colored Canton crepe dress which was badly waterstained. This is the method I used; I put it on a narrow ironing-board and sponged it with clear, cold water, taking care that every bit of the dress was gone over. It was then put on a hanger to dry, and afterward pressed on the wrong side. The result was, it looked like a new dress. That was a year ago, and it has not water-spotted since." Answer: Thank you, Reader Friend, for sharing this practical hint. I am sure there are many who will benefit by your clear directions.

COLLARS AND CUFFS RETURN. Paris, Sept. 16.—Collars and cuffs are taking on added importance this year, after enjoying several seasons of simple lines. Any woman who happens to own some of their white stock "choker" collars of several years back can bring them out with the greatest assurance. Lenief is showing them with nearly every one of his tailored costumes. They are not joined to the blouse and, in fact, seem to have very little connection with it, but the white gives a charming touch at the throat, and, strange to say, this kind of a collar is becoming to nearly every woman. These new stocks, by the way, have wide tab ends which extend as far as the waist-line. There are many varieties of these Directoire collars, and some of the suits and coats show the Directoire revers as well, with sometimes a short shoulder cape that reminds one of the battle-costumes of Napoleon and his generals. The wide cuffs of the Napoleonic era also appear this season.
