CATTLE POISONING IS BEING PROBED

Reports Made of Heavy Losses at Fort Stewart to the Farmers.

Belleville, Sept. 22.—Disturbing reports from the north county of cattle poisoning cases are being investigated by the provincial police, Major Bumpstead, at headquarters, announces.

So far as can be traced the trouble has been caused by cattle drinking from Fraser Lake, in the vicinity of Fort Stewart. No human agency is suspected. Dr. Wellbanks, veterinary surgeon, has been detailed by Major Bumpstead to conduct an investigation and carry out an analysis of the contents of the stomach of a cow which has died.

Eleven of them belonged to Mr. Andrew Wilson and four to Alex. Patterson. Samples of the water have been sent to Toronto for analysis and it is possible that in that way the cause of the death of the cattle may be uncovered.

The provincial police will carry the investigation to the limit to ascertain what has caused this severe loss to these northern farmers.

EXHIBITION CLOSED ON SATURDAY NIGHT; THE MOST SUCCESSFUL EVER HELD HERE

Five Thousand People Attend the Last Day—The Historical Pageant Was Produced Again on the Closing Night.

The city fair grounds closed its gates Saturday night on Kingston's biggest and most successful industrial exhibition. Whether looked at from the point of view of attendance, programme, exhibits or weather this claim holds good and amply proves that Kingston and Frontenac can support a big exhibition, and encourages the directors to go on to greater efforts, looking towards making their undertaking The Fair of Eastern Ontario.

The attendance on Saturday, estimated at five thousand, was good for the closing day of a five-day show, with a clouded sky giving threats of a shower. The exceptionally fine weather that favored the fair throughout lasted till its close. The first rain of any consequence in the five days set in about 10.45 p.m., the first few drops, strangely enough, falling as Mr. Bushell was closing the exhibition with a few remarks in front of the grand stand.

There was not the packing up and nakedness that one might expect on the Saturday closing of an event of this kind. The most of the exhibitors left their goods in the palace till late Saturday night and spectators still thronged the building after 10 o'clock. The midway, too, showed no intention of folding its tents and when the pageant was over at ten o'clock the merry-go-round, the aeroplane whiff and the ferris wheel's circle of lights were going as merrily as ever.

The treasure was the largest ever moved through the streets of New York City, and, according to W. R. Huntington, traffic manager of the Adams Express Company, which did the work, the greatest ever transported in the history of the world.

Deadlines were established by the police three blocks away from each of the bank buildings, machine guns were mounted and more than three hundred armed men guarded the progress of the bank's treasure up Nassau street. There was not a single untoward incident and at 12.30 o'clock it was announced that the transfer had been completed. Everything moved with the precision of clock work in accordance with plans that took months to work out. The details were approved by Chief Moran, of the United States Secret Service, and Police Commissioner Enright.

Express company officials said the largest previous movement of treasure through the streets of New York was last year, when more than $200,000,000 in cash and securities, belonging to the Bowery Savings Bank, were transported from the old building at 138 Bowery, to the new bank structure on East 42nd street.
