Was Fined $2 And Costs For Assaulting His Mother-In-law.

The armistice was signed about six years ago, but the fighting is not over yet—at least there is a good deal of it going on, as the evidence given in the police court from day to day will show.

On Thursday there was a story told before Magistrate Farrell about women fighting with mops-in fact one entire family was alleged have been implicated in the fracas. In the police court on Friday morning was unfolded the old, old story of a father putting up a fight to secure possession of his child. But the father in this case overstepped the mark in going into a home where he had been forbidden to enter, in order that he might get his child. Said house happened to be that of his mother-in-law, and following the visit, the mother-in-law laid a charge Co. of assault against the father, and after much evidence had been taken Magistrate Farrell found the father guilty and imposed a fine of $2 and mother-in-law had her innings in the box first, and she told about having her daughter's child at her home. The father came to the house to get the child, and forced his way into the home. There was no welcome on the mat for the father, but in spite of the frost on the window panes, the father came to the house, along with his sister. He demanded that he be given his child, but the mother-in-law said "no." But the father would not take "no for an answer, and in the row that followed, the mother-in-law fell on the floor and hit the back of her head. It was alleged that the father struck her, but the father, in his evidence, declared that his mother-in-law stumbled over a chair and this caused her to fall. However the magistrate stated that he be lieved the evidence of the plaintiff. Magistrate Farrell said that although he found the accused guilty of an assault, it was not of a serious nature. He well understood the circumstances. It was the old, old story of the husband desiring to get

The father said that he wanted to take the child to the hospital so that she could see her mother. At the present time the youngster is being cared for at the father's home.
