Reunited With His Parents After 18 Years of Separation

Wallace Rawson Served With the British Air Force in Mesopotamia—His Camp Was in View of the Ruins of Ninevah.

There were no happier people in Kingston on Saturday than Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Rawson, 177 Clergy street east. That morning their son, Wallace, whom they had not seen for eighteen years, arrived home from Mesopotamia.

In 1906, when Mr. and Mrs. Rawson left Braunston, Rutland, England, to come to Canada, Wallace, then a little boy of six years, was left behind. The steamer Megantic brought him to Canada last week, a grown up man with a charming English girl as his wife.

Those eighteen years were full of unusual adventure for the son, who was left in the Old Country. They included the historic period of the Great War and in that he took a worthy part. He joined the British Navy and most of the time was with the Mediterranean fleet as a wireless operator with the wine-sweepers.

When the war was over Wallace joined the Air Force and his duties early took him to the Levant, where he remained. He went to Egypt first where he spent six months on reconnaissance work. Then he went to Palestine, to Turkey in Asia and finally to Mesopotamia where he spent the last three years.

Air Force in Mesopotamia.
 Britain has three groups of air force in Mesopotamia to keep order and prevent raids by the neighboring Turks. Mr. Rawson was an observer with the twelve planes stationed at Mosul, in the north part of the country. The method used of maintaining the status quo was to bomb the Turkish raiders who crossed the nearby border and Mr. Rawson's work meant daily trips in the air. His planes were of the heavy bombing type and, as observer, he looked after the distribution of the explosives which were intended to spread terror among the disturbers of the peace. The Turks are now using planes, too, but they were not entirely defenceless before, and the British planes sometimes limped home with bullet holes in their petrol tanks.

Bigger planes are also in use in the country. Thus on the air route from Cairo to Bagdad, aeroplanes carrying seventeen soldiers are seen. This route enables transportation that would take a week on land to be made in eight hours. Postage on a letter by air costs nine pence.

The airman's attention was sometimes directed toward the Arabs. A levy was required of them and if they didn't pay up, a few bombs were tried to remind them of their obligations.

It is difficult to understand how white men could work in such temperatures as Mesopotamia suffers. In August, 1920, at Basrah, one of the other British posts, the thermometer went up to 148 degrees in the shade. The summer temperature at his own camp averaged from 110 to 120 degrees. The rainy season lasted from November to January.

Manna Still Falls.

Mr. Rawson's journeyings took him to many interesting places. He visited the historic spots of Egypt and Palestine. His camp in Mesopotamia was in view of the ruins of Ninevah, where Noah's tomb still exists. It must be visited in one's bare or stocking feet. Prisoners from across the border told of a region where manna still fell, and Mr. Rawson secured some for a souvenir. He also visited one of the alleged sites of the Garden of Eden, where a dead tree is carefully preserved as the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Mr. Rawson has many an interesting story to tell of this ancient land.

Naturally, Mr. Rawson's family, several younger members of whom he had not seen before, are overjoyed to think that he has come through so many dangers unscathed. He has taken his discharge from the air force and he and Mrs. Rawson are planning to make their home in Canada.

CAPT. W. J. FINNEY DECIDES TO RETIRE

As R.M.C. Riding Master Under Calder Pensions Act—To Reside in Toronto.

Captain W. J. Finney, riding master on the staff of the Royal Military College, has retired under the Calder Pension Act, after twenty years service in the permanent force. Captain Finney, who served with distinction during the great war, enlisted as a private in the ranks of the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery and went overseas as the sergeant-major of that unit. His services in the theatre of war earned him promotion to the rank of a commissioned officer, and he returned to Canada with the rank of captain. Upon his return to Kingston, he was appointed instructor in artillery at the Royal Military College and he held that position until the death of Captain Bray and he was then posted as riding master at the college. During the time that he has been riding master, he in company with a number of the men attached to the riding establishment at the college have visited many of the fairs and put on excellent exhibitions.

Captain Finney, who is a Baptist in religion, is the superintendent of the First Baptist Sunday school which will lose a very capable official by his removal from the city. Captain Finney and family will leave this week for Toronto where he will make his future home.

FOUND LEMON EXTRACT AT SIDE OF HIS BED

This Is the Story Tippler Gave to Police Magistrate Monday Morning.

Ontario went "dry" last Thursday, but there were three men charged with intoxication at the Blue Monday morning session of the police court.

The three admitted their guilt and in the evidence it was shown that there had been a variety of beverages used to bring about the desired "kick." Wine, lemon extract, home brew and two per cent beer, figured in the list. Two of the offenders were fined the usual $10 and costs, while the third was remanded for a day as his story as to how he secured some extract of lemon, was a bit hazy. Probably this was due to the fact that he was taken in charge just a few hours before the opening of the court. When asked where he had secured his liquor, he stated that he found the lemon extract at his bedside. He did not put it there, but as he could not give any further information the magistrate remanded him for a day in order that he might refresh his memory.
