MOVIE UNITES NURSE TO MAN LOST IN WAR

Officer Reported Missing is Found in Hospital Recovering From Wounds.

The Chicago Herald-Examiner has the following Ottawa special: The movies have solved a puzzle that for six years the military authorities of three countries, England, France and Canada have been working on and as a result a war romance long thought shattered will shortly terminate in the wedding in England of a heroic British officer and a Canadian war-time nurse.

During the war Miss Victoria Phillips, a Canadian nurse, met Capt. George T. Walters of a Guards regiment. It was a case of love at first sight, but shortly after the meeting the captain was sent with his battalion to France for active service.

From the battlefields of France and Flanders and a London, England, war hospital the mutual exchange of correspondence continued. Then came a big attack in the spring of 1918 on the Somme. The Guards were in it. Letters from France suddenly ceased. From the war office to Miss Phillips came the bald announcement Capt. Walters "missing."

Still Dreamed of Hero. All that was six years ago but the Canadian nurse had had a dream that her war hero was living. She never gave up hope and following the armistice she visited the battlefields with no success. War records departments of three nations did their utmost but to no avail.

Hope seemed forlorn but Miss Phillips continued undaunted in the hunt for her lover. Weeks were going into months and months into years until a few days ago British government war films released by the government censors after six years were announced to be screened in the Canadian capital for the military powers that be. The Canadian nurse secured admission hoping against hope that here she might secure information that might aid her in her quest.

Picture Told Story. The picture for military information unfolded its tale of war and horror until it came to the battle of the Somme. Here before her eyes Miss Phillips saw her captain being carried into a dressing station seriously wounded. She almost collapsed in the theatre. Later she had an enlargement made of the piece of film and again got in touch with the military authorities on both sides of the Atlantic Ocean with the result that a cable just received in Canada announces that Capt. Walters has been located and is still in hospital, suffering from war wounds.

In reporting Capt. Walters missing it develops a mistake was made at the war office and that Capt. Walters, failing to receive mail from his Canadian nurse, had ceased writing. The captain now according to cabled reports is making rapid progress from his war wounds and the war time engagement is on again so much so that Miss Phillips is shortly sailing for England where a wedding ceremony will take place in London early in the new year.

Tenth Anniversary Of the Great War

Dec. 5th, 1914. A big engagement is slowly developing. Four hundred thousand fresh British troops have reached France and are now on the firing line. The Allies are pressing a vigorous counter-offensive to German attacks. The British hold line along the Yser river, where the Germans are expected to centre attacks.

Here is the difference between attacks by aviators, Allies drop bombs on gun factories, while the Germans drop bombs on defenceless women and children.

Splendid Red Cross work is being done by the women of Kingston and district. The many articles that have been prepared for the soldiers are enumerated.

The 21st Battalion is a credit to its officers. It is a splendid body of men who have become soldiers in a month. There is lots of accommodation for a third contingent. The R.M.C. dormitories are available and the model sheds.

In the Italian parliament Thursday afternoon, there was a tremendous demonstration of sympathy and support for the heroic and unfortunate Belgians.

British warships continued the bombardment of Zebruggo on Thursday, preventing the German engineers from reconstructing the harbour as a base for submarines.

The Germans attempted to set up coast defence guns at Ostend, but were driven off by the British howitzers.

London despatches say that King George was under shell fire on Thursday, and a portion of exploding shrapnel hit his motor car.

Germany lost 120,000 men in Poland and the car's forces have resumed the offensive everywhere.
