Eric MacDonald, one of the Canadian MacDonalds, was a college chum of mine who, at twenty, did not commend himself of his professors. A twenty-two he was the youngest colonel in the British army, commanding the 10th Battalion with ever-increasing distinction. What chances for mas will have charge of the gospel evensong. Preacher, Rev. W. E. incrediable promotion came in those dangerous days!

Peace tolerates shams and windbags. War ruthlessly removes al such. General Pooh-Bah, with "every button doing its duty," was massive figure in 1914. In 1918 Pooh-Bah was on the scrap heap: The trim, Keen figure of Eric MacDonald had been lifted to his place.

But peace has come, and the por bellied General Pooh-Bah, with bluff and blow, is to the fore once more. Phoenix, rising from its ashes, has got nothing on the resuscient power of Pooh-Bah and his ilk.

It would be the part of true statesmanship if our legislators, con sidering undeveloped resources, would give a thought to the undeveloped resource of youth. The country is infinitely the loser by that array of talent which in a persous yesterday was so quickly apprehended, which back in security, so quickly has been suffered to return into oblivion

After the last election, in Canada, among our sympathetic veterans were mutterngs of the word "ingrathtude." Said one, "They soon forget about us fellows and what we did, give us the glad hand, then back it up with a kick in the face." But that is not the opinion of Young Canada. Our defeats were not explained by ingratitude.

The trouble was that we were asleep until the last minute. The old guard politicians were onto the job, morning, noon and night. They Bethel Congregational Church, Sydenham Street Methodist - had an organization. They had a perfect machine, for which they paid corner Barrie and Johnson streets Christmas messages and Christmas the necessary price in toil and effort.

Delane, of the London Times, who was editor at twenty-three, said in a speech in later life, "The trouble with young fellows to-day is that they are afraid of responsibility."

In this revolt of Youth we are not out for a new political party. We are for a national party that stands fairly for the interests of all, rather than for a selfish group whose platform of statesmanship is, "As, long as we get what we want for us farmers, or for us laborers, the rest of the country can go to the bow-wows."

Our hope is not in these quack schismatic groups, our hope rather in the old parties renewed with strong, clean blood. Young Canada will even yet blow the breath of new life into

Liberal and Conservative, will even yet bring forth reborn the commons and the senate. General Pooh-Bah and the other Golisths may despise our Youth, and laugh at our sling and pebbles. Laugh on, Oh, Pooh-Bah; when you are pushing daisies we will still be children of the sunshine.

"Time is on our side," was Gladstone's retort to Disraeli. Time is still on the side of Youth. With every funeral we are stronger. But let us not wait too long for dead men's shoes, for the Man with the Scythe has also got his eyes on us.

With so many leagues being formed, it is surely not amiss that there should be for Canada a League of Youth; a league to carry on in peace with the same practical idealism that made us great in war.

"How the old world, groaning undernearth its burdens, needs that League of Youth!" says a writer in the Round Table. "Let no one imagine that Europe is now on the highroad to prosperity. That is not yet in sight, and the nations have yet many a long and weary mile through bog, through bush, through brake, through briar."

The staleness and weariness at home and abroad is a call to us, as clear as the call to arms.

The hope of the world is the youth of the world, and our time is now aeus more conspicuous.

If the crowd was like a crowd today waiting for a procession to pass we LAURA SECORD GIVES may be sure that the boys in the street "guyed" Zacchaeus, and made all sorts of fund of him. But Zacchaeus did not care for he had determined It that he was going to see Jesus.

That is the right way to see Jesus. We never can see Him while our hearts are full of pride, and also we must rise above the throng. So Zacchaeus climbed a sycamore where lesus was to pass.

Jesus Stopped.

And then a strange thing happened Jesus was looking for Zacchaeus even more than Zacchaeus was looking for Him. That is always the way. Jesus is always anxious to make himself known So, here, He stopped under the tree, and he invited himself to Zacchaeus' home. What buzzing of tongues there Jesus had gone "to be guest with a man that was a sinner." Jesus had no more pride than Zac-

Shares Its Profits With Those Who Serve the Public.

The Laura Second Candy Shops have for a second year in succession divided their profits with their employees who have been with the company for upwards of six months. Cheques were last evening received by the salesladies in the local shop. These represented a substantial percentage of the total salary earned by each employee during the past year, making each one a copartner in the organization.

This came as a complete surprise to the local staff, who expressed delight at such a happy Christmas
