eral, on both sides of the line, are better than they were at this time last year. They certainly are very much better in the United States, and it has always been true that Canada has in some degree shared the ups and downs of the neighboring republic. At all events, it has never happened that trade expansion has taken place in the United States co-incidentally with depression in Canada. The two countries are so sympathetically connected that such a thing could not occur.

The railways of the United States have sounded a common note as they have moved into 1925. They took for it to be the biggest traffic year in their history; and that expectation can only be realized because of industrial and commercial expansion beyond the limits of 1924 or any preceding year. It would be unreasonable to look for conspicious proofs of broadening business during the severer months of winter; yet a rising volume of traffic between now and 1st April would undoubtedly be a very positive augury. It will therefore be peculiarly interesting and suggestive to watch the trend of carloadings during the next ten or twelve weeks.

The railways of Canada are prepared for the larger traffic movement of which the commencement of 1925 gives the promise. That promise does not rest on the facts as to carloadings alone. It has its chief base in the judgment of bankers and forward-looking men with their fingers on the pulse of trade.
