can be no genuine hope of stability. Belgium has shown amazing resourcefulness and determination. The London Times recently observed that "of all the continental countries involved in the war, Belgium has made the greatest effort to restore budgetary equilibrium by increases in taxation." That tells the story of method. Britain did the same thing. France shied from the necessary resort to taxation, and is now paying the penalty.

Of Germany little can be said. The operation of the Dawes plan has but begun. There are grounds for the hope, however, that Germany will loyally adhere to the terms, and that results will justify the plan. About Low Blood Pressure. importance of low blood pressure, because everybody seems to be stresyou that in treating any ordinary case of illness, he would rather have the blood pressure above than below normal.

Although there are a number of things that may affect blood pressure, our research men are now of the opinion that the nervous system is the big factor. The resistance to the blood in the vessels is what makes blood pressure. If the tiny muscles in these walls do not get real strong impulses from the brain, they do not contract or work hard enough to keep the walls real tight and so the blood can flow under less pressure. This applies even more to the very small vessels, which connect the arteries with the veins. If the muscles in the walls of these little vessels are relaxed or slack, because the nervous system is not sending impulses enough to contract them, then too much blood gets into these connect-
