MISS JEAN CHOWN'S SPLENDID RECITAL

Kingston's Famous Contraito Delights Large Audience on Sunday Evening.

At the close of the service at Sydenham street church on Sunday evening Miss Jean Chown gave a recital of seven numbers, accompanied by the organist Mr. H. Hill who contributed a fine offertory to the programme. It was an unusually happy and sympathetic gathering. Miss Chown's art has advanced to that stage of apparent effortlessness where she can sway her audience to whatever mood she pleases. And on Sunday evening the congregation, proud to have her back from her American successes, gave themselves up with delight to her will.

Miss Chown's voice has developed steadily, even since her triumphant return from England three years ago. In ease and naturalness of control, in richness, perhaps most of all in expression and in ability to make her audience feel the mood of what she is singing, which is the final glory of music, Miss Chown shows the rewards of the tireless training which she has maintained. That so great an organization as the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, considers her their outstanding student in operatic singing is a mark of an excellence which Kingston hardly appreciates. But on Sunday evening there was no lack of apprecia tion. As the last rich note of some great piece died away into silence, the audience sat for a moment in stillness and then a breath like sigh went up and the spell was Miss Chown's first choice was the noble "Oh, Lord, Have Mercy Upon Me" of Pergolesi followed by "He Shall Feed His Flock" and "He Was Despised" from the Messiah. In these two the audience was able to compare Miss Chown's rendering with that of soloists recently brought from Toronto, and the verdict would undoubtedly have been strongly in favor of Kingston's own lovely singer. The tenderness expressed in the one and the grief in the other were strangely communicated to the listeners. "Thou Shalt Bring Them" from Handel's "Israel in Egypt" concluded the first part of the programme. In the interlude Mr. Hill played an enjoyable offertory.

The second part was opened with Schubert's melodious and solemn Litany followed by Gounod's dramatic "O Divine Redeemer" in which Miss Chown's great voice rang out in pleading and the audience felt itself in the presence of a soul in mortal struggle but finding at last divine peace. And to round off a perfect evening Miss Chown finished with a simple hymn, "The Sabbath Prayer" by Reichardt in which the worship and aspiration of hearers seemed to find outlet. The service was fittingly closed with the benediction.

The Organ Fund of the church will benefit bandsomely from her
