BIBLE THOUGHT
RIGHTEOUSNESS BRINGS PEACE:

The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever. And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places.—Isaiah 32:17, 18.

THE ROAD TO PEACE.

The League of Nations International Conference for Control of Traffic in Arms opened in Geneva on Monday last. It will endeavor to draft a treaty acceptable to the great powers, including the United States, to restrict the sale of munitions of war. At least thirty-nine nations, including Canada, will be represented at the conference. What will be the results of the deliberations of this important body cannot, of course, be predicted; but all who are in favor of international co-operation for the preservation of the peace of the world will devoutly pray that measures may be agreed upon favorable to that object.

The world is war-weary. Moreover, the illusion that fighting can possibly settle anything has by this time been dissipated. The only danger which may be on the horizon grows out of smouldering hatreds and the fear of reprisals. A world police force could very well take care of a situation of that nature, and such a force would today be in existence if it had not been for the hesitating attitude of the United States, which was more the product of politics than of reasoned judgment. Because of that negative attitude, however, our neighbors are bearing a heavy responsibility.

SANITY BREAKS IN.

The sustained budget debate at Ottawa afforded an excellent medium for the discussion of the Crow's Nest Pass agreement; yet little was said about it. That is suggestive of a saner view of the problem which the judgment of the Supreme Court has put up to Parliament. Time has apparently led to broader and clearer thinking in respect of a matter as to which very positive opinions were expressed a few months ago. Yet one member, among the few who alluded to the matter at all, was outspoken. Mr. D. W. Warner, of Strathcona, said:

"The Crow's Nest Pass agreement was a bargain made between the people of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am sorry that the court did not decide that it should apply to other railroads as well as those which were in existence at that time. I am not going to question their decision, but I would expect Dominion law to do the rest of it, when we hold the Crow's Nest Pass agreement for the regulation of the freight rates on those roads that were in existence at the time the agreement was adopted."

Mr. Warner is expecting too much. Parliament will scarcely be disposed to extend the Crow's Nest Pass rates to all railroads in Canada, knowing full well that such a step would only intensify a problem which is admittedly so grave at the present time as to press imperatively for solution. Instead, Parliament is likely to refer the whole matter of rates to the Railway Commission, which is the tribunal created by law to apply regulation in a judicial, rather than a political, spirit. That is the course of safety and justice.

BRITAIN'S BOLD STROKE.

The financial world is watching with deep interest England's bold stroke in the matter of restoring gold payments. It is conceded on every hand that the movement is full of promise. During the years following the war Great Britain suffered severely in her export trade because of adverse exchange rates. With that disability removed, she looks confidently to the immediate stimulation of her industries. That, however, is no more than secondary to the recovery of her position as the monetary centre of the world. Britain's invisible exports hang in some degree on that fact.

In all this we may discern a fresh and inspiring demonstration of Britain's methodical and courageous way of reaching an end. Ever since the close of the war she has bent her energies toward this consummation; and in her hour of achievement we may share her pride and satisfaction. She has exhibited a virility and strength which has astonished an onlooking world.

LIBERAL FINANCING.

In July, 1921, the Conservative Government of that day floated a guaranteed railway loan for $25,000,000, running for 25 years, and carrying 6-1/2 per cent. interest. It sold for $2.05. Nine months later the present Liberal Government floated a similar loan for $11,000,000, running for three years, and bearing 5 per cent. interest. It sold for $9.03. Here was a great difference so far as the public treasury was concerned.

The Prime Minister brought out these and other telling facts the other night, and very appropriately took credit for his Government for such a significant demonstration of skill in financing. It could not be said that this large difference in results was wholly due to a favorable change in the money market. There had been a betterment; but not to that extent. No one can fairly contrast the financial operations of the late Government with those of the present Government and fail to withhold just credit for genius and sound judgment as shown by the latter. The present administration took office under circumstances which should not be overlooked by those who are disposed to complain, and with cause, of the public burdens arising out of taxation and debt. It inherited the results of financing on a tremendous scale, which now stands out as having been badly and wastefully done. For example, the Conservatives floated a loan for $25,000,000 in October, 1920, when inflation was still high, to which an interest rate of 7 per cent. attached. Prudence dictated a short term; but the loan was actually negotiated on a twenty years basis. That, and many similar transactions, were left as a burdensome legacy to the Liberals.

In October, 1920, every condition showed that the peak of inflation had passed. In a few directions prices were breaking. They were topping under their own weight in a world which was surely moving swiftly toward readjustment. Yet, under such conditions, so apparent to everybody whose eyes were open, the late Government incurred capital obligations which cannot be reduced for many years to come. These things ought to be known by the people at large, and the responsibility located where it really belongs.

MORE THAN GOLD.

Of all the steps for the restoration of the post-war world the resumption of the gold standard by Great Britain, and the announcement that the major part of the civilized world is now on the standard is by all odds the most significant. It took the United States fourteen years to resume specie payment after their civil war. Great Britain, and the world, have done it in just half the time, after the greatest of all wars. Even France accepts the challenge, and will doubtless now face the necessity of revaluing the franc, on something like its present basis of a little over five cents, as a preliminary to going on the gold basis.

All this means more than gold. It means the old economic basis of the world. It means an international standard. It means that neither the political economic revolution of Russia nor the threatened monetary revolution of Germany will transform the world. Two crises are past. The future is to grow by evolution; not to be made over by revolution. We shall be able to do business with each other and to deal politically with each other. One of the strongest ties of the unity of mankind is re-established.

Canada's Story
Day by Day
By J. M. Campbell

May 8th.

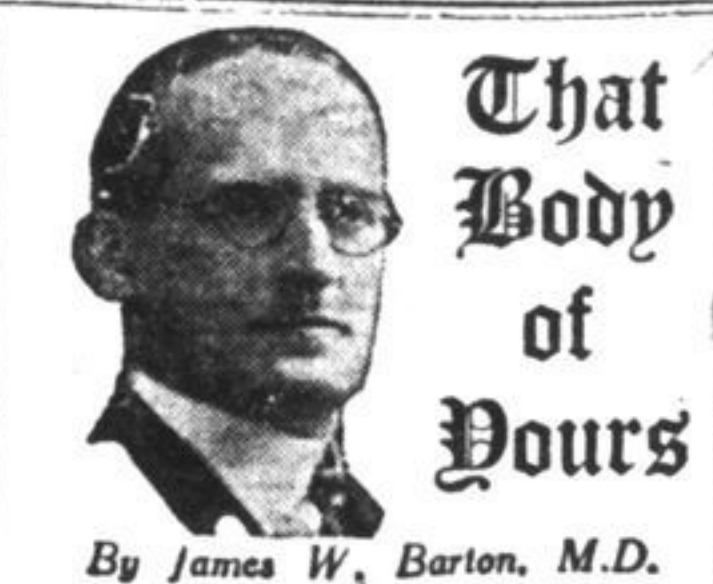

There arrived at Kingston one day in the year 1799, John Strachan, a young man from Aberdeen, recently the parochial schoolmaster of Kettle, in Scotland, and destined to become first Bishop of Toronto, and the founder both of King's College (from which the University of Toronto was developed) and of Trinity College.

His father, overseer of certain granite quarries, was poor, but cherished ambitions for his son, who was educated in the Grammar School and King's College of his native city. The young man indeed was of a sufficiently forceful character to rise with little help. Invited to Canada by Hon. Richard Cartwright, who wanted a tutor for his sons, he opened a school, which he kept successively at Kingston and Cornwall before removing it to York, in 1812, when he became rector of that town.

A RALLY SERVICE

Held By the W.M.S. of Princess Street Methodist Church. On Thursday evening the Woman's Mission Society of Princess street church held a delightful rally service. The attendance was so large that the Sunday school room was practically filled. Mrs. Balls, the retiring president, had charge of the first part of the programme until the new officers were installed by Mrs. J. K. Curtis, when the new president, Mrs. Murphy, took the chair. Miss Simpson conducted the Bible reading. Mrs. Balls led in the opening prayer. Solos were given by Miss K. Fynn and Mrs. Ferguson and Miss Curtis gave a blackboard talk explaining the organ and growth of the society, the work done in China and Japan, as well as in Canada; the disposition of funds and the duties of the various branch and board officers. Reports of the year's work were very encouraging. After a short business meeting, Mrs. Mavety closed with prayer.

A social half hour followed, during which refreshments were served. The twelve new members secured as a result of the rally were warmly welcomed by the society. That Body of Ours

Plasters. One of the old fashioned treatments for different ailments, was the various forms of plasters, that were applied to different parts of the body. The idea is that of "counter irritation," or the irritation of a healthy part in the production of an area of inflammation on the skin, to produce a good result on a more distant part. Perhaps the most popular "plaster" is our old friend the mustard plaster, which has been used in households for a great many years. This is made by using equal parts of mustard and ordinary flour, made into a paste by mixing them with water or vinegar. It has been used for all muscular pains, for pleurisy, for rheumatism in the joints, applied to the back of the neck for headache and so forth. The action of the plaster is to cause the nerves supplying the part to which plaster is applied, to send an impulse to the nerve centre, supplying the part. This in turn sends to the nerve supplying the entire section—new impulses, which change in some manner the tissues in the affected part.

It seems to cause the removal of congestions or inflammation, to cause these inflammatory products to be absorbed, and the removal of these products relieves the pain, because pain is usually due to some form of pressure. Where severe counter irritation is desired the application of caustic soda, and silver nitrate, has been used. The actual burning of the flesh with the cautery, is another severe form of counter irritation.

Blistering with the tincture of cantharides, is sometimes used in pleurisy. Iodine has come into very general use for swollen joints or enlarged glands. The Belladonna plaster is used in simple back ache, or other muscular pain.

However, safe effective plasters may now be purchased from your druggist. Where the mustard plaster is applied don't leave it on too long because some skins are very tender.
