On Thursday morning, when a representative of the Whig visited the General Hospital, the superintendent. He stated that he had questioned the two men who were in the pharmacy stores, at the time the fire started, and was of them was smoking, nor did they

Dr. Duncan, one of the house surgeons, and Isaac Plunkett, the porter, were down in the store room for the purpose of getting some alcohol. For years it has been the custom of the institution to distribute the alcohol which is used for rubbing purposes, between 5 and 7 o'clock. The alcohol is kept in a large barrel and it has been the practice of the authorities to fill the bottles from the barrel. The two men were in the act of filling one of the bottles when without warning, there was a sudden burst of flame. Dr. Duncan received a few burns about the ankles.

It is understood that the alcohol barrel was leaking, and there was a small portion of the fluid on the floor.
