CONSTANCE TALMADGE IN

NEW COMEDY DRAMA All the world likes to laugh, and here is one of the best laugh-getting comedies ever put on the screen. & Constance Talmadge is a natural comedienne. She has a bright and snappy personality that always goes over big. - And she finds unlimited scope for her comedy in this picture. "Learning to Love," at the Capitol Theatre today and Saturday, is just what the title says. Here we find Constance in an exclusive boarding school, vamping every man she meets. She thinks she knows all there is to know about love-making. Her professor "falls" for her; a dozen or so college boy admirers throw their hearts at her feet, and even the street urchins worship her. Then, returning to New York, she encounters the guardian of her fortune (Antonio Moreno). Constance gets the first joit of her young life when the guardian refuses to succumb to her allurements. He is a man of the world and sees through the tinsel of her flappery. It is then that she starts learning what love They finally marry, while five forgotten fiances do battle royal on dersigned and endorsed "Tender for her doorstep, but Constance has become so involved in scandal, as a July 22nd, 1925, for the supply husband quits her on their number night. THE FRENCH-RIFFIAN CAMPAIGN IN MOROCCO

At the left is one of the wild and hardy mountaineers, typical of the riflemen who form the backbone of the armies of Abd-el-Krim. Note the inlay on rifle barrel and stock, and the leather ammunition bag he sports. The building is the fortress and capital of the Moroccan leader, the stronghold of Adjir. Inset is a late photo of Abd-el-Krim, leader of the Riffs, who has proclaimed the singular belief that Morocco and all its mineral wealth should belong to the Moroccans.
