Can You Make Good Jelly?

An experienced housekeeper sometimes forgets that there are young housewives to whom the science of jelly-making is still a mystery! But, with a little experimenting, the Bride Housekeeper soon learns that it is a simple task to make delicious jelly. Here are some of the important points of the art:

In the first place, no jelly is going to "jell" unless the fruit from which you make it contains enough of that gummy vegetable-starch called "pectin" which stiffens jelly. Some fruits are rich in this substance, others poor. The pectin-rich fruits are apples, currants and oranges (in the orange the pectin lies in that thick white under-part of the skin).

So, if you wish to make jelly from strawberries, blackberries, blueberries, raspberries, rhubarb or any of the other fruits which have but a low percentage of pectin, you must use one part of this fruit with one part of the pectin-rich fruit to obtain a good, firm jelly.

To make Red Raspberry Jelly, for instance, wash an equal measure of the berries and white currants. Place this combination over the fire with no water (only the hard fruits such as apples, pears, and quinces need a little water to keep them from sticking to the bottom of the preserving kettle). When hot, crush the fruit and continue to cook gently till it is soft. Then drain through a double thickness of cheesecloth, but do not squeeze (if you squeeze the jelly bag, you will have a cloudy, instead of a clear, jelly). This mere dripping of the juice makes what is called a "first extraction" jelly, a clear jelly. After you have made jelly from it, you can reheat the fruit in the jelly bag, adding a very little water, and again drain it through the bag, this time squeezing it, to obtain what is called a "second extraction" jelly; this second "watch" will not be clear, but it will be just as delicious and useful on the home table.

When the juice has finished dripping from the un-squeezed contents of the bag, measure it by cupfuls. To every cupful of it add one cupful of granulated sugar. Put the pot over a good fire and let come to boil. Then simmer for five minutes. Now is the time to begin making the "jelly test": take up a little of the cooking juice in a tablespoon, hold it high in the air, and drip it back into the pot. If two drops form on the edge of the empty spoon, your jelly is ready to be turned into hot glasses (which you have sterilized) by boiling 15 minutes in clear water and allowed to cool. But it will most likely take ten minutes for the jelly to reach the "jelling" stage.

All inquiries addressed to Miss Kirkman in care of the "Efficient Housekeeping" department will be answered in these columns in their turn. This requires considerable time, however, owing to the great number received. So if a personal or quicker reply is desired, a stamped and self-addressed envelope must be enclosed with the question. Be sure to use YOUR full name, street number, and the name of your city and state.

WON'T BOSSIES BE JEALOUS?

Lolita Lee has discovered what she claims is the coolest way of wearing her hair. And, oh, what a vicious-swope she has taken at the bob-haired damsels. For the fair Lolita's pet style is the "cover all" as she calls it, long tresses wrapped around head and neck. Anyway, it certainly looks classy on Lolita.
