MRS. RILEY OF ATHENS REACHES GREAT AGE

Another Story of a Nonagenarian Who is in Good Health.

Athens, July 29.—Occasionally one hears of an individual who has attained a more advanced age than our "oldest resident," yet very few perhaps at her age are still mistress of a home and performing the daily routine of household tasks.

In April last, Mrs. Wilson Riley, Wellington street, celebrated her ninety-third birthday, and though her hearing is somewhat impaired, yet she and her aged husband attend to their duties unaided, except when a friend or neighbor drops in to lend a helping hand.

This remarkable old lady was born on the farm now owned by Adam Hawkins, just south of the village on the Charleston road. She is the last surviving member of a family of fourteen children born to the late James Wilts and his wife, Mary Coleman. Her grandfather, Joseph Wilts and family, escaped to Canada from the States during troublous times, the wife and children being placed on the back of a faithful black horse who swam the St. Lawrence river at Prescott, the husband making his way across, as best he might. Later this man established a grist mill on the farm now owned by Roy Aigue, Wiltsdown, it being the first mill of the kind in the vicinity. Previous to this, any wheat flour had to be ground at Brockville.

Most people in the early days used more corn meal, which was made from pounding the corn in a hollowed out stump of a hard maple tree. The meal was sifted after the process, the finer grade being made into "Johnny cake" which was baked in the brick ovens by the fire-place, the coarser grade, by long slow cooking in kettles hung by cranes before the fire-places being made into porridge. Cows were kept from which ample supplies of milk, butter and cheese were produced, thus augmenting the bill of fare. Wild berries grew in the woods, and the luxuriant maples afforded the opportunity of making their yearly supply of syrup and sugar, the latter being stored in huge casks. The methods employed were primitive, most of the utensils used being hand-made, but the early settlers were resourceful, and made everything from furniture to shoe pegs.

Once, in sugar-making time, when Mrs. Riley was ten years old or so, she and a younger sister went to the bush to see what was going on. They decided to go to another bush, separated from that by a foaming spring torrent which was spanned by a log. In crossing, the sister slipped in, but the older girl seized her hair, and pulled her to safety. Well for her was it that day that the craze for bobbed hair had not arrived! Among her earlier teachers, Mrs. Riley recalls Henry Lillie, and Martha Elmore, who taught in the building now owned by Abel Kavanagh, and occupied by him as a dwelling. In that house, too, (corner Elgin and Wellington streets) she attended Sunday school as a child, the late Mrs. Stone being her teacher.

In those days the ground surrounding Athens was densely wooded, part of the land being swampy. There were wolves and wild-cats prowling about, rendering it unsafe to be about after night-fall, and necessitated a close watch being kept for the safety of the stock. Oxcams were used for the most part for ploughing and hauling loads, but the cutting of hay and grain was done by means of the scythe and cradle. Horses were kept for making journeys, the mull being carried thus. Once while riding horse-back when a girl, Mrs. Riley's saddle slipped around carrying her under the horse, but some one, seeing her predicament, ran to her rescue before she was injured.

Many years ago Dr. William Howard was a most successful physician who resided near Soperton, and ministered to the country-side. Later Dr. R. K. Addison, an eminent practitioner in his day, came here to reside. The first store she recalls was a frame building (on the site of Aboud's store) owned and occupied by Mr. Lauder who resided across the street on the premises owned now by Dr. J. F. Harte.

Social life was not entirely neglected. There were occasional dances, neighborly visits, and, in the fall and winter, "paring bees," when the young people went in sleighs drawn by steady oxen. Early in life, Mrs. Riley, then Miss Ruth Wilts, married her kinsman, Levi Wilts, who passed away about half a century ago, leaving her a family of two sons, Mahlon and Millard, and a daughter who later became Mrs. James Sheldon, Wight's Corners. Of these but one, Millard Wilts, Clyde, U.S.A., survives. Later Mrs. Wilts married Mr. Wilson Riley, and together this elderly couple reside on Wellington street enjoying the confidence and affection of their friends and neighbors. Mrs. Riley thinks the auto is a great change from the old ox sleigh but says she prefers a nice horse and buggy when she wants to take a pleasure trip.

Darling motored to Crosby on Tuesday.

BANQUET GIVEN TO NAPANEE CHILDREN

By the Veteran Charles Stevens, One of the Town's Leading Business Men.

Napanee, July 31.—One of the most unique and largely attended banquets ever given in Napanee was held last night at the business premises of the Charles Stevens Company.

The host was the veteran townsman, Charles Stevens, and his guests were the kiddies of the town to the number of five hundred; and each of them received an invitation card which bore a number. These cards were put in a hat and the first three drawn entitled the lucky ones to valuable prizes.

The following notice was painted on a banner in the office window: "My Diamond Jubilee, Farewell Banquet Orchestra—Refreshments, Thursday evening, July 30th, 1925. 7 O'clock. Every girl and boy Welcome."

Altogether there must have been nearly a thousand persons present. Amongst other pleasures the children had, was all the ice cream they could eat.

Charles Stevens, who is known all over the American continent, both north and south, as the original distributor of "Canada Hardwood Ashes," for fertilizing purposes, is now an old man in years, though his heart is still young. He has been in business here for 50 years and is an ex-mayor of Napanee. For some years he published a newspaper known as "The Napanee Star." He also had other business enterprises. One side of his life and character is not so well known, and that is that he is and always has been very charitable and philanthropic, but his good works have been done quietly and unostentatiously.

Part of the promised entertainment of the evening was the "life story of a boy who started as a sailor, then became a soldier and later on a business man."

The youngsters appreciate the kindness of Mr. Stevens and will never forget his Diamond Jubilee.
