That Body of Ours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

Life Tables.
Some interesting tables were thrown on a screen for us some months ago. The lecturer was showing how the span of human life had been lengthened eighteen years in America, during the past seventy years. To illustrate what could be done by scientific feeding and care, he showed how the life span of a species of mosquito was lengthened almost fifty per cent. Of course the biggest gain in extending life's span was made by saving the lives of infant children. In past years nearly half the children born, died before they reached their first birthday, whereas to-day only about eight children in every hundred fail to reach their first birthday.

Then diphtheria and other children's diseases that formerly carried off thousands yearly, were now practically under control.

A little later in life came the tendency to tuberculosis, and we all know how the present treatment of fresh air and good food has taken tuberculosis from the head of the list as a cause of death.

Thus it is the success the profession has attained in caring for the infant, the child, and the youth, that is responsible for the lowering of the death rate, and thus lengthening life's span. I'm afraid this gives us a very comfortable feeling, and helps us to forget that many of our most valuable citizens are cut off at, or just past middle age.

The causes of death are usually from heart, kidney or blood vessel conditions, although cancer is responsible also for a great many. And so the profession now is turning its attention from the ailments of youth, to the ailments of these middle aged persons.

There is no question but that some of the trouble is due to neglect of conditions that could have been removed at an earlier age, but as the fighting ability of the body was good these things never got to the top.

One writer has well said that these conditions are more often than not the effect of wear and tear of tissue, rather than the result of infection. They reflect the type of personal hygiene practised by the individual.

Just think of that. The cause of death in middle aged persons, the cause that is preventing our life span from being what it could be, is simply the unhygienic living of intelligent people. And yet all that personal hygiene means is proper eating, enough rest, and some real exercise.

NATURE LORE
By Wallace Havelock Robb.

When the old woodsman found out that I would give up a good meal any day, for a good wild life story, he told me one that happened only last year.

The Boy Scouts of a certain section of Montreal, were in camp on a nice lake in the Laurentian Mountains. Our friend happens to live in a shanty not far from where the camp was located, so the boys got into the habit of visiting with him.

The boys showed some of their wood lore to the old man and got his confidence, so he took them over to the lake and pointed out a particular high rock on the shore and told them to fish for trout there, in the evening and they would be sure to get some fish. He told this to only two or three of the boys.

The very next day, the father of one of the boys came up to see the camp and, after he had seen all the different things that boy scouts can do, the evening drew on and his son suggested a fishing trip over to a secret spot he knew about. He said this to his daddy in a very impressive way and let it be known that boy scouts are on the job all the time.

Well, Dad and son were in the flat bottomed boat, one at each end, fishing in the deep dark hole near the high rock, and had caught several fine trout, when, without a word of warning or any sound whatever in advance, up popped a magnificent loon, right beside the boat at the boy's end.

The loon gave a frightened, surprised squawk, cut short by a hasty dive out of sight, for he had come up in the wrong place. The boy, also startled so that his hair stood on end, gave a gasp, threw up his rod and toppled over into the water.

For a while, our wet scout tried to convince everyone that he was diving after the loon, but he couldn't get away with it.

However, a good catch of trout convinced everyone that he was a good scout, even if a loon could take him by surprise.

Purse Stolen in Church.
St. Catharines, Aug. 25.—While kneeling in St. Catharines' Roman Catholic Church at her devotions Saturday night, her purse containing $200 was taken from the seat occupied by Miss E. A. Sheridan, a local milliner. The empty purse was found behind a nearby blacksmith's shop yesterday.

Canada's Story Day by Day
By Edna Davies

August 25th.
Even the great Marlborough was not free from the schemes of jealous rivals in 1711 his enemies in an effort to offset his glories and lure attention from him, decided to launch a great attack against Canada. For this purpose seven veteran regiments were despatched to Boston under command of General Hill, an incompetent court favorite, the fleet being commanded by Admiral Walker, another incompetent. At Boston the attack was organized and the great armada, composed of nine ships of war, two bomb ketches, sixty transports, store and hospital ships and nearly twelve thousand men sailed on July 30th. They ran into difficulties in the St. Lawrence being without pilots who knew the river and lost six transports and nearly a thousand men at Isle aux Oeufs. On August 25th they held a great council of war at which both leaders showed a keenness for giving up the expedition. It was decided to quit the St. Lawrence and give up an expedition which was almost certain of success had it been persisted in.
