WEDDINGS.

Cannon-Newman. At one o'clock on Thursday the marriage was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents on William street west, of Mildred Eleanor, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Newman and Mr. William Carl Cannon, only son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Y. Cannon, Alfred street, by Rev. T. J. S. Ferguson, minister of Cooke's church. The bride, who entered the drawing room on the arm of her father to the strains of the wedding march played by her sister, Miss Dorothy Newman, wore a charming frock of white pin-stuff crepe with lace insets and panels fastened at the side by a taffeta bow. Her veil was caught to her hair with orange blossoms and she carried a shower bouquet of ophelia roses and lilies-of-the-valley. The ceremony was performed under an arch of flowers and ferns, aster being used in abundance and ferns and palms making an effective background. During the signing of the register, Miss Dorothy Newman sang "All Joy Be Thine." Little Seldon Newman, a cousin of the bride opened the door to the guests who were members of the families of the bride and groom. Refreshments were served from a table centred with a wedding cake and decked with flowers and immediately afterwards Mr. and Mrs. Cannon left on their wedding trip by motor, the latter wearing a flowered silk frock with a coat of brick suede trimmed with fur and a hat to match. The young couple will make their home in Kingston.

Breaking a Lance For the Modern Girl!

More power to the Rev. E. L. MacAssey, vicar of East Grinstead—he has broken a lance for the modern girl. Amid the thunderous denunciations of men, and the no less voluble complainings of women, it is good to hear one voice raised on behalf of the girl, who, in a good percentage of cases, is twice the girl her mother was. Maybe the flapper does flap a bit too much. She certainly stays out too late at night, but at that, to our mind, she is no match for her old grandmother, who sits down in a darkened room at two-thirty of a glorious afternoon, and plays bridge for money till five o'clock, takes an interval off for a too-rich tea, and a too-heavy dinner, and then goes at the cards again in a frenzy, not to beat an opponent for the fun of the game, but to win some more money that doesn't belong to her.

The vicar referred to, who seems to have been stung into something like exasperation by the diatribes against the girl of to-day, reminds his hearers that the girl who has gone through the horror of an air raid is not likely to consider it the thing to faint at sight of a mouse or to ask for a chaperon when she goes to the telephones. He also says you can't expect her to follow the fashions affected by her Victorian ancestors, and for our part, we are devoutly thankful she doesn't and we only hope she won't in our day. Some of the frocks of the day may use very little cloth in the making, but to our mind they are infinitely to be preferred to those garments which some of us can well remember, garments that called for wire behind and whalebone before to set them off.

Modesty doesn't consist in shuddering when someone calls a spade a spade, and carefully simulated ignorance of various unpleasant things has nothing whatever in common with innocence, one of the loveliest things in all the world, and one of the strongest weapons against evil. We are apt to confuse the two. Quite possibly, too, one of the reasons why a great many girls are being so roundly condemned to-day, is because they refuse to pretend ignorance of the shadowed side of life and are coming out into the open and protesting against the conditions which are causing it.

In going on with his defence of the modern girl the vicar of East Grinstead remarks that "goodness need not be synonymous with dullness," and adds that it has never been the Church's teaching that a sense of humor is incompatible with a devout life. "The modern girl," he says, "as a rule, shuns the middle age sins, and responds remarkably to the appeal of religion."

Now the vicar doesn't mean by all this that the modern girl does not too often get herself tangled up in terrible tragedies, and we don't mean to say so either. Sometimes, though in rare cases, the tragedy means that the girl has looked at her brother and asked, "Why haven't I as much right to go the pace as he, and still retain the respect and the affection of my family and friends? Of course one answer to that is that two wrongs don't make a right and that woman is in a sense that man can never be, the gate of life and the guardian of the race, and carelessness in the upkeep of the gate brings disastrous consequences. Too often the tragedienne takes the form of a mad and too hasty marriage, but what of the Victorian marriages of convenience? Of the two we think the arranges will give these last the greater condemnation.

At the root of most of the girl tragedies to-day lies the sinfulness, or the equally sinful weakness, of the fathers and the mothers. In too many homes there is no firm, but loving, control in childhood; no loving sympathy in youth. There has been really nothing to make the home either a refuge or an anchor in the storms that beat more fiercely on the girlhood of to-day than upon their beat on the girlhood of the past. Indeed, whatever blame attaches to the modern girl, attaches seven-fold to those who have brought her up and are setting her a bad example. —G. C. M. White in The Ontario Farmer.

A Crocheted Head Bag. Some time ago one of my Column Readers asked for directions for crocheting a perfectly plain silk hand-bag with a draw-string top. The following directions could be used without inserting the beads, although the bead decorations are most effective.

Crocheted Head Bag: In these directions "B.S.C." means bead with single crochet. The materials needed, are two spools of blue purse twist, 15 bunches of blue beads, and a steel crochet hook (sizes nine to eleven may be used). One side of the stitch should be taken up when beads are being added, but to make the work tight the hook should be inserted through both sides otherwise. The beads are added on the side which is away from the worker, the wrong side of the bag being entirely plain. Before beginning the crochet, string the beads on the purse twist (two to four bunches at a time being enough to work with).
