FIRE AT STELLA.
Destroys the Home of R. J. O'Connor on Saturday.
Fire broke out in the home of R. J. O'Connor, Stella, on Saturday morning, destroying the house and all its contents. The fire was discovered about 5 o'clock, and immediately an alarm was sounded. It was not long till many of the villagers were on hand, but the fire had gained too much headway, and when it was seen that there was no chance of saving the house, all work was concentrated on the adjoining buildings, which were saved through the fine work of the villagers. The fire started by a coal oil stove. The house is owned by Mrs. Hugh McCormack, Stella.

Hugh Buckler, with strongly recruited support, is likely to appear in the latter during the lengthy run now being booked for it.

Has Yet To Win Spurs.
The Chesley Enterprise suggests that "Mr. H. E. Fense, the new editor and proprietor of the Walkerton Telescope, is the victim of a family tradition of having 'yet to win his spurs,' but bids Brer welcome in these guarded words: 'Looks to us as though he would be quite an acquisition to the newspaper fraternity of Bruce. He has yet to win his spurs in local journalism and we believe he will keep the family tradition in this respect.'"

A Favorite in North Bay.
The North Bay Nugget says that town was greatly shocked and saddened by the sudden death on Queen's campus of Russell A. McTavish, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert McTavish of that place. Deceased was twenty-two years of age, very popular and familiarly known as "Mickey." He was a fine student, a fine athlete and a good mixer. While at the North Bay Collegiate he was first vice-president of the Literary Society, in which he showed keen interest and willing activity. He was a member of the senior basketball team for three years and last year was captain of that group. He played on the Collegiate rugby team last year and always displayed an interest in tennis. Russell is survived by his parents and one sister, Rachel. The funeral took place on Sunday.
