PROBATION OFFICER IS MORE ESSENTIAL

In Juvenile Court Work Than Judge, Miss Whitton Tells the Kiwanians.

Whether or not Kingston is to have a juvenile court is one of the most burning questions in local circles, and the interest that has been aroused both for and against the idea has created considerable discussion. The Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs have taken an active interest in the debate, and have had speakers present to lay the idea before them. Last Friday, the Rotary Club heard Mrs. A. L. Clark on the subject, and on Monday at noon the Kiwanis Club members were addressed at their weekly luncheon at the Frontenac hotel by Miss Charlotte Whitton and Mrs. Clark.

Miss Whitton went thoroughly into the work of the needs and advantages to be derived from a juvenile court in Kingston. She declared that the work of the juvenile court was not merely for the purpose of taking into custody and detaining juvenile law-breakers. It was more of a court of rehabilitation. The work to be carried out under the laws governing the juvenile court would prevent cases from even appearing in court at all, as the probation officers would be able to deal with situations arising among delinquents and rectify the situations before there would be any necessity for court action.

There were two important points in connection with juvenile court work, that of judge and of probation officer. The latter, Miss Whitton contended, was even more essential than the judge in that such an official would be full time and would be in close touch with the cases requiring attention. The speaker stated that no juvenile court could properly function without the probation officer. She pointed out that the juvenile court of Ottawa had a full time probation officer and a vast amount of splendid work was being carried out by this officer. Much depended on the probation officer. She stated what was needed was the application of social service into the work of the juvenile courts.

Under the juvenile act, Miss Whitton stated, the law was able to get after the parents or those in charge of delinquent children and if they were taken in custody and detained for any length of time, parents or guardians were called upon to pay up for these delinquents. In the city of Toronto where this was in force, a considerable amount of money had been saved the municipality as a result of this.

Miss Whitton took up the point of area control, and stated that it was very important that the area to be covered by the probation officer should extend into the county because the work could not be carried out effectively if the area were limited to the city only. A delinquent could easily avoid detention by going a few miles in the county and defying the probation officer.

The speaker declared that special detention quarters should be provided for cases, perhaps the Orphans' Home or some private home where a person who would be responsible could look after those detention cases until such time as the trial sessions. She said that the attorney-general may name a place to be used for the detention of delinquents. Miss Whitton opined that the children, unless the cases were exceptional, should never be removed from their own homes to await trial. She also advocated that the courts be held frequently instead of at extended intervals. It would be much easier, she stated, to hold court three times a week for an hour each time than it would be to hold court for five hours once a week.

Miss Whitton contended that there should be a separate court room for the delinquents as well as in separate offices. A clerk of the court would be required, but this office might be combined with the Children's Aid Society work. Miss Whitton stated that the amount put aside for the carrying out of the work had not been nearly used up in several cities where there was a probation officer and where the work was being carried out as she outlined. She stated that the attorney-general fixes the salaries. The clerk of the court and the probation officer are appointed by the judge, so that it was necessary to have as judge a man of intelligence and with knowledge of the work, so that the appointment of these officials would be the very best.

The speaker stated that under the Act, the juvenile court might waive its rights of jurisdiction in cases where it deemed it advisable for action by the criminal courts. It did not wish to take away from the criminal courts and cases of more serious nature were freely turned over for judgment.

In concluding her address, Miss Whitton made a strong plea for the juvenile courts as outlined in the plan she had given and she stated emphatically that under this system more efficient and profitable work could be accomplished among the delinquent juveniles.

Mrs. A. L. Clark gave a brief talk on local conditions, declaring that the juvenile court was a great need in Kingston. She quoted Police Chief Robinson, who had stated that he would welcome help in looking after these cases as the department of which he is chief, had found it difficult to look after delinquents with the time given them for this work.

Mrs. Clark declared that there was no suitable place in Kingston for the detention of delinquent juveniles and felt that the need of a juvenile court in Kingston was a big one. Kiwanian Alan Metkejohn expressed the appreciation of the club members to the speakers for having addressed the club and also moved the appreciation of the principles of the juvenile court.

The booster for the day was Kiwanian Harry Wilder and splendid prizes were won by Kiwanians George Hanson, Ernie Sparks, Frank Day and Edward Walsh. George Bawden was welcomed back.
