STIFFNESS AND ACHE GONE IN ONE NIGHT

Sportsman is "as good as new" after one treatment

Sportsmen have learned a simple way to take out pain and stiffness when they get lamed up from exposure or over-exertion.

A Philadelphia sportsman writes that he caught cold in his back while out gunning and the next day found himself so stiff and lame he could hardly bend.

"I went to work, but had to come home," he writes. "I applied Sloan's freshly and went to bed. The next morning I was as good as new, thanks to the quick and sure action of Sloan's Liniment." (Name and address given on request.)

It is amazing what Sloan's does for any kind of muscular pain. Just pat it on lightly. No need to rub. Sloan's alone does the work.

Instantly it sends a healing tide of fresh, new blood right to the sore spots. Your muscles limber up, stop aching and get back their tone. So clean and pleasant to use, too. Get a bottle today. All drugists—35 cents.

Phantom of the Opera

Christine and Raoul at last find happiness.

CHAPTER TEN

DOWN the labyrinthian cellars they rushed, carrying flaming torches which lighted their way and threw weird shadows on the vaulted walls. Their shouts and their clamor would have been sufficient to strike terror even in the souls of the most fearless. But Erik, if he heard it at all, heard it uncaring, for from his organ still poured forth the golden sorrowful tones of his majestic requiem.

Undecided as to whether to warn Erik of his danger, Raoul and the Persian stood in the center of the room looking at each other. But almost immediately the sound of the mob outside the door, hammering and crying out for vengeance, destroyed all thought of escape for Erik.

Before Raoul could throw open the door they had broken it down, and they rushed into the room, crying out for Erik and for revenge.

Raoul rushed to the door which led into Erik's music-room and held up his hand.

"Stop!" he cried, and a hush fell upon the crowd. And from the organ came a loud, final, triumphant peal which flooded all their hearts with harmony, and then dead silence fell.

Raoul quietly opened the door, and all drew back at what they saw, for Erik had finished his requiem, and now lay back, in a collapse that seemed like death, before his beloved organ.

The Persian went forward and took Erik in his arms and heard him whisper:

"All I wanted was a wife... like anybody else... But it doesn't matter now... I am going to die... Let her be happy with her lover... I am dying, my friend."

The pathos of his dying cry made the mob forget his crimes, and their clubs and weapons were slowly dropped from their hands. Erik struggled to rise, but his strength was gone. Yellow flames of misery shot forth from his terrible eyes, and then the eyes closed.

The Persian rose slowly, and with some sadness. "Erik is dead," he said.

EPILOGUE

There is no need to repeat how greatly this case excited Paris. The kidnapping of Christine, the fall of the chandelier, the disappearance of Raoul, what tragedies, what passions, what crimes had surrounded the idol of Raoul and Christine! After the death of Erik, the Persian told the story of the Phantom.

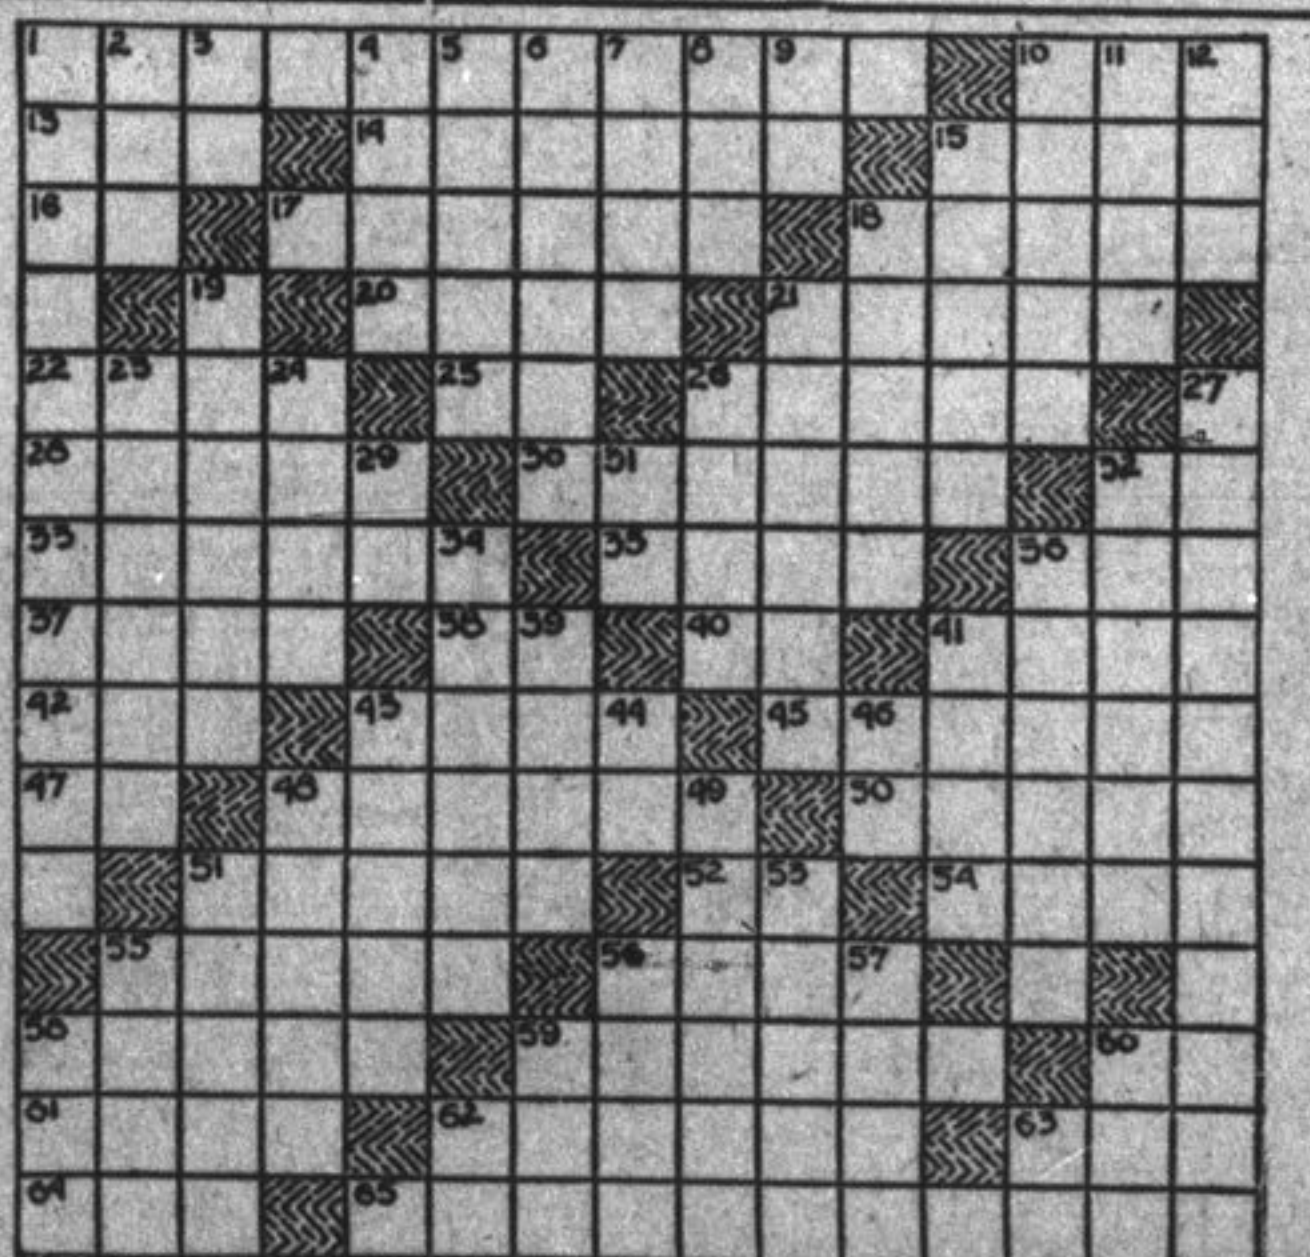

It appears that even as a boy no one could look on him, and he ran away from home at an early age and joined a traveling circus. Here he learned magic and jugglery and traveled all about Europe. So far did his fame spread that the Sultan of Hazenderan heard of him and ordered him to come to the palace. There he was commissioned to build a palace for the Sultan full of secret passages, torture chambers and various devices. And when the palace was finished the Sultan, in order that no one in the world should ever have another such palace, determined to put Erik to death. He was saved by the Persian, who was Chief of Police at the time.

Erik wandered about the world and finally came to Paris. Tired of his adventurous, formidable and monstrous life, he decided to become an architect and contractor and build ordinary houses with ordinary bricks. He tendered a bid for part of the foundations of the Paris Opera when it was being built, and his bid was accepted. When he found himself in the cellar of his enormous building, his artistic, fantastic, wizard nature resumed the upper hand. He dreamed of creating for his own use a dwelling unknown to the rest of the world, where he could hide from men's eyes for all time, near his beloved music.

The rest of his story has been told. As for Christine, she had lost all heart for singing again in the building which had housed so much terror, and one day she and Raoul took a train which carried them from Paris forever away from all the memories of their misery, to a far-off place where they might be happy and alone.
