That the state opening of the British Parliament on Wednesday was a brilliant event, in spite of the fact that the court is still in half mourning for the Queen Mother. The many black gowns but emphasized the sparkle of the hundreds of magnificent gems. Imposing tieras threw halos of light above their wearers' heads; diamonds scintillated; pearls gleamed softly and in some cases the jewels almost covered the bodice of the ladies who made their courtesy to their sovereigns. Queen Mary wore a shining jet gown and her glorious diamonds. Her gown bore Maltese crosses of priceless diamonds. The Duchess of Devonshire wore her ropes of pearls and the Marchess

That as one goes about the streets entering shops and cars it beco noticeable how few people remember to say, "Thank you" to the men or them or show the kindly courtery we owe to one another as fellow citizens. A mother who has been trying to train her son in the little things that count, says he remarked the other day, "Half the ladies for whom I hold a door open never say thank you. What is the use of being polite when they don't appreciate it?" The mother replied that he had the satisfaction of knowing he had behaved like a gentleman, but at the same time wondered what manner women these were who neglected thank a boy for standing aside to let them pass or holding a door open for
