That lace insets and flowing sleeves will appear on the newest afternoon frocks and give a relief from the straight lines that are trying to many figures.

That the students of Queen's are practicing hard for the College Frolic and promise the public a good Mardi Gras entertainment.

That the Board of Trade of an Alberta town, in a resolution passed this month, showed itself highly incensed over Mrs. Nellie McClung's book, "When Christmas Crossed the Peace."

That the country of the Peace is not a bootlegger's paradise. It is a good country and the people are neighborly and law-abiding citizens.

That Toronto and the ladies who are spending the winter there, because their husbands are members of the Provincial Legislature, are looking forward to better arrangements at the opening of parliament on Wednesday than have been made in the past.

That some of the explanations for the ungainly carriage of the girls of to-day are given as follows:

- 1. The wearing of high heels throws the figure out. 2. Small close hats that fit the shingled head do not need to be balanced as did large hats poised on elaborate coiffures. 3. The fashion of the wrap-over

Don't Spoil Your Child's Hair by Washing It

When you wash children's hair, be careful what you use. Do not use prepared shampoos or anything else that contains too much free alkali.

The best thing to use is Mulsified Coconut Oil Shampoo, for this is pure and entirely greaseless.

Two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified is all that is required. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily.

coat which induced a stooping attitude.

HER OWN WAY

By a Girl of To-day.

WHY GIRLS WALK HOME. As I wearily put my latch-key, in the lock, I noticed with consternation that there was a light in mother's room.

I opened the door softly and sat down on the stairs and removed my wet and sodden shoes.

Sounds of conversation came from the room above where my parents slept. I could not distinguish the words but both voices were raised and disagreeably raucous.

I knew that I would be in for another hour of explanations and excuses and would not be able to rest my weary body or ease my troubled mind unless I could pass that door, which was slightly ajar, without my parents hearing me.

I thought excitedly that my father's voice was raised to such a high pitch of anger that it would be impossible for him to hear me, but it also made it impossible for me not to hear what he was saying.

"I tell you, Susan, I will not have that girl staying out to this time of night. It is simply scandalous! It must be nearly morning." As if to confirm his statement, the clock on the landing struck four.

I stood still and held my breath while dad, after counting the tell-tale tones, returned to the attack.

"You need not tell me, Susan, that a girl can stay out until four o'clock in the morning and still retain any semblance of reputation or decency."

"Jason Dean, do you know you are talking about your daughter, Julia?" asked my mother sagely.

"I am perfectly well aware of it, madam, but I am not such a besotted fool as to think my daughter is any different from any other man's girl, although you may think so. I heard you making very scurrilous remarks about the little Winston girl the other day because she was hurt in a collision while joyriding with Lyman Andrews. Is it any more respectable for your daughter to be 'joyriding,' as you called it, than Winston's?"

"But, Jason," remonstrated my mother, "she is out with Charles Becker and you know I have been expecting the children to announce their engagement ever since he came home from college. Surely you cannot think that any young man would treat the girl he is going to marry otherwise than with respect!"

"Respect! Hell!" was my father's retort. "I know that when I was young no respectable girl would be out until four o'clock in the morning with a man alone unless she wanted to be considered fast. You ought to get hold of young Becker and make him tell you what his intentions are. It is my opinion that they are not of marriage."

They were so engrossed in their quarrel that I passed the door in safety and softly shut myself in my own room.

Then I sat down on the floor and silently laughed, although I wanted to scream.

I wondered what answer Chuck Becker would make mother when she asked his intentions toward me.

"Next! Youth's Declaration of Independence."

Her Find. "I found a letter in a woman's handkerchief in your pocket this morning," she began angrily.

"But what—where—why—I didn't know—did you open it?" he asked in confusion.

"I did not, it was the one I gave you to mail a week ago."

STABLES FASHIONABLE AS OWELLINGS.

London, Feb. 8.—Many of London's aristocracy are busy converting disused stables and attics in Mayfair into stylish maisonettes for their own use, and the Duke and Duchess of York indirectly are responsible.

Since these members of the King's family settled in in Mayfair there has been a stampede to live near enough to bask in the princely smiles. There is a great shortage of houses in this section, and those available mostly enormous, old-fashioned mansions, costly to lease and expensive to maintain. Hence the conversion of stables.

Mayfair has, of course, long been the home of the elite. It is to London what Park Avenue and Fifth Avenue are to New York.

In the old days, there were many mansions filled with small buildings in which the blooded horses and the fine carriages of the aristocracy were housed. Since the automobile has come into such common use, however, the glossy steeds and the gorgeously uniformed lackeys have largely joined the other picturesque relics of the heyday of blue blood.

Now there are few mansions in Mayfair these days which do not house distinguished families.
