The Levana dinner was the event of Saturday evening at Ban Righ Hall. Long tables for the girls of the different years were arranged in the big hall and at the head table were seated the guests of honor, including Dr. Margaret Patterson, Toronto, who gave a splendid address on her experiences in India and in her present position as Toronto's woman magistrate. Toasts were drunk and some bright speeches made. Miss Nora Dehart, president of Levana, presided.

The Whig will be glad to have the names of visitors in town and accounts of various social events for publication in the social columns. Such communications should be signed and the address of the sender given. Write or telephone to the Editor of the Woman's Page, Telephone No. 2613.

On Friday evening a pleasant surprise was held by some friends of Mr. and Mrs. Elwood Finigan at their home in Barrie field. The evening was spent in cards and games. Mr. and Mrs. Finigan are leaving for the west shortly. An address was read and they were presented with a gift. Their friends joined in wishing them success in their new home.

Mrs. W. F. Nickle was a guest at luncheon given in Toronto in honor of Madame Maria Kurenko, a clever Russian lady, by the Toronto women lawyers. The function was an exceedingly bright one.

Cloche Hats Condemned. London, March 1.—Cloche hats were attacked on medical grounds by Sir Robert Armstrong-Jones, the famous physician, in a lecture on "Clothes" at Gresham College.

"In my opinion, the cloche hat is made much too tight," he said. "Apart from the tight hat and the exposure of the neck and chest, however, there is little to be said against the sanitary and salutary way in which women dress today."

"Women dress better than men from the health point of view. Men err in wearing woolen pyjamas at night. They should be made of either cotton or silk. Men's collars are worn to grip the neck too tightly, which is bad for the veins. The top-hat, the worst kind of headgear, has gone. I am glad to say, except at weddings and funerals."

"Women will never wear the 'perfect' dress. They say it would be ugly and 'trumpish.'"

The Editor Hears

That this is the season of the year the good housekeepers are planning the improvements they will make in the houses and the pretty new curtains and chintz coverings they will have this year. The shops are full of alluring things, just what one wants to brighten up the rooms and make them attractive and able to bear close inspection when the bright spring sunshine floods them with light.

That General Pangalos' edict against short dresses has hurt the feelings of some Athenian women, who consider themselves the best judges of what they should wear. So they have set to work to circumvent the ordinance of the premier and at the same time poke fun at it. They go forth in skirts that barely reach the knee and when a policeman comes in sight with a summons-like look in his eye, the dress lengthens down to the ankles as if by magic. An ingenious system of elastic enables the wearer to lengthen and shorten her dress at will. It is pretty hard for a mere man to control women's dress.

That scientists tell us it is not safe to carry dieting for "the slim boyish figure" too far without consulting a doctor. There are reasons for this warning that only medical men can give and it is said many women are laying up a middle age of ill-health by drastic measure. They should know how much they should weigh before they try experiments.

That the future generation should be a healthy one. On every hand there are evidences that the world has awakened to the tremendous asset healthy people are to a community. We hear that an anonymous gift of $75,000 has been received by Vassar College for the scientific care and study of children from infancy to the school age.

That the enemies of the crow will be interested in hearing that the officials of the United States Department of Agriculture have decided that the woodpecker, not the crow, destroys the larvae of the cornborer.

HER OWN WAY

By a Girl of To-day.

STARTED. When I said I was going to Chicago, it was this time that Chuck laughed.

"You would rather go up against a wicked city than me, wouldn't you, Judy? When are you going? May I ask?"

"Tomorrow morning, Chuck."

"Well, if you're not home in a month or two I'll probably drop down to see if you haven't changed your mind."

"Don't put yourself out, Chuck," I answered casually, "and you'll have to excuse me now because I'm going home to pack up."

I had all my packing done when Dad came home that night with a return ticket to Chicago.

"Thank you, Dad," I said, "I'm all ready for the morning train. But why did you spend your money so foolishly?" I admonished as I held the return ticket up to him.

"Because I expect you back within a month," he answered seriously.

Poor old Dad and Mother. They hated to see me go and to tell the truth I was a bit shaky, but I was determined to keep up my bluff and I knew if I stayed at home they would not let me out of their sight.

At the last Mother clung to me saying: "Don't forget, child, to wear your heavy boots if it rains and wrap up warm if you go out at night. The evenings in Chicago are very cold."

Mother was heartbroken but she had lived under Father's will for so long that she had no idea of what getting out on my own would mean to me. She had nothing to advise me about or even tell me except a few foolish details of physical care for my health.

I thought there was a tear in Dad's eye as I raised my face to kiss him goodbye, but his mouth was stern even when he spoke his last words to me, which were:

"Don't lose your return ticket."

As I watched them from the window before the train started, I had a little qualm. I wondered if it wouldn't be better to stay at home with them even if I did have to give up my ideas about my own way or any liberty whatever.

"When I have children," I said to myself, "I will never expect them to go back to my ways which are dead and gone, but I'll try to travel on to the new ways with them."

LAUGHTER.

Allen Johnson in New York Times. Without the smile how oft would flow the tear;

How drear would be the world were laughter dead.

Like Strygian night when day's last gleam has fled;

How dimly would drag the dreary year.

Brave laughter e'er was conqueror of fear;

Count him not brave whose tears too oft are shed,

Nor deem him shallow who can laugh instead,

But hold him, rather, master of the sea.

Without the star that, smiling, lights the night,

Heaven's spangled canopy a shroud would seem;

Through grief's dense blackness would there pierce no light,

Save for the smile of hope's illumining gleam;

And life, that is at best a smile, a sigh,

Would be a tragedy should laughter die.

Macaroni With Beef.

Two slices bacon, 1-2 pound round steak, 1 large onion, 2 cups boiling water, 1 cup macaroni broken in inch pieces, 2 cups canned tomatoes, 2 teaspoons dark brown sugar, 1-8 teaspoon pepper.

Cut bacon into tiny pieces and try out fat. Cut meat into half-inch dice and sear quickly in hot bacon fat. Stir with a fork and cook until meat is brown. Add boiling water, onion cut in thin slices, tomatoes, sugar and pepper and cover closely.

Simmer over a low fire for two hours or until the meat is tender.

Put 8 cups of rapidly boiling water into a large sauce pan. Add 2 teaspoons salt and when water is boiling hard slowly add macaroni without letting the boiling stop. Boil for twenty minutes or until tender but not soft and sticky. Drain and rinse in cold water. Reheat in the meat sauce and serve at once.
