Questions and Answers

Dear Editor:—In answer to "Housekeeper's" letter I would say that Milton J. Rosenau, professor of preventive medicine and hygiene in Harvard University, says regarding pasteurized milk:

"It means simply heated milk. It is not necessary to boil milk to pasteurize it. The milk should be heated to 148 Fahrenheit for thirty minutes. A lower temperature may not kill the bacteria, a higher temperature or a longer time is not necessary. The word pasteurization is used in honor of the great scientist, Pasteur, who discovered the process. Pasteurization neither improves or harms the quality of the milk. It is the same milk heated to 148 degrees. Pasteurized milk is just as digestible and just as nutritious as raw milk. Heat does not in any way destroy the vitamins in the milk."

HER OWN WAY

By a Girl of To-day.

"THE HOUSE DETECTIVE." "I haven't a relative in the city." I answered. Until now I had not sounded the depths of my condition. In my despair I was about to ask the woman if she would loan me enough money to telegraph my father, when I heard another voice at the door asking for me. The attendant said: "They want you, miss."

"Not knowing who 'they' were and scarcely caring, I went forward. It seemed to me that nothing could be worse than what I had already experienced in the last half hour, but worse was to come. I found the waiter and a man with a peculiarly hard countenance, standing just outside the woman's dressing room.

"The waiter seems to think you were ill, miss. Can we be of any service to you?"

"I am not ill, but I've lost all my money."

The waiter held out the bill for my dinner to the man. He scrutinized it carefully and then looked at me searchingly.

"You may use the house phone to telephone your friends," he offered.

"I have no friends here. I am alone in the city."

"The man looked me over again appraisingly.

"I'll take you to the manager," he said.

Although I was terrorized as I had never been before, I could not help noticing that as we walked through the dining room to the office, we attracted much attention, but it was not until I had faced the manager and realized that I had been following a detective attached to the restaurant, that I understood why the people looked at me.

Clement Sterns, as I learned his name later, was an unknown type of man to me. He seemed to think that a young, unprotected woman was a legitimate object of his attention. I felt myself trembling and turning alternately white and red before his narrowed eyes.

"So, you've been trying to beat the restaurant," were his first words.

"I beg your pardon?"

"Well, you came in here and ordered an expensive dinner for which you cannot pay."

"No, sir, I cannot," I answered.

"I thought I had two hundred and fifty dollars in bills in my bag when I came in and only discovered that the bag was gone while the waiter was out for my ice cream."

The Editor Hears

That already people are planning St. Patrick's Day parties. St. Patrick's Day, falling as it usually does in the middle of Lent, is always the occasion of many gaieties, especially for those who, more or less observe this season. Already the green trefail that is a Canadian substitute for the shamrock, is seen in the forster's windows and the shops are showing St. Patrick's cards and favors.

Women Find

Great comfort in this new hygienic pad that discards easily as tissue—no laundry

ON many important counts, women are deserting the old-time "sanitary pad."

There is a new way. A way that multiplies protection. A way, too, that solves the old problem and embarrassment of disposal.

It is called "KOTEX." Ends the insecurity of the old-time sanitary pad. Five times as absorbent! And deodorizes—ends ALL fear of offending.

As easily disposed of as a piece of tissue. No laundry. No embarrassment.

You get it at any drug or department store simply by saying "KOTEX." You ask for it without hesitancy.

Costs only a few cents. Eight in 10 better-class women employ it. Proves old ways an unnecessary risk.
