Jimmy laughed. "Mooney's a man of direct action—and of originality. No. Barry, I'm not going home until the puzzle is unraveled. . . . You see, as long as I stay here I seem to be a source of irritation to someone who evidently knows a lot about the murder. If I go home, they may never find him. But if I stay the chances are this person will get a little overanxious and make a slip. Then we'll get him." "If you insist on staying," re-

"I should think you would be." said Barry, lighting the cigarette for him, "A sensible person would clear out and go home."

"It's this feeling of being constantly watched, Barry. It's not the threats. I think they are a schoolboy trick. . . . But to be haunted by the feeling that every move of mine is known to this-this some one, whoever it is."
