Maintaining Traditions.
The Peterboro Examiner on Friday said: Kingston has an enviable reputation as a hockey town, and its youth of to-day are ably maintaining the traditions of their cities. Eastern Ontario towns and cities generally lack the material facilities boasted by their rivals in the western half of the province, nor are they as populous, but there is a compensating excellence of ability and courage that has been particularly evident this season. Many of our young go west under the impulse of its attractions, but the east still has its paladins of the athletic arenas.
