Adventures of the Twins

By Olive Roberts Barton.

The Twins Meet Mister Rubadub.
"Hello! Hello! Is that the house where the Twins live?"
"Yes—this is Nancy," replied the little girl, for it was she who had answered the telephone.
"Oh, hello, Nancy!" said the voice. "This is Mister Rubadub, the fairyman who runs Scrub-Up Land. Are you busy?"
"Not very," said Nancy excitedly. "Nick and I are playing 'Casino.'"
"Oh, ho!" came Mister Rubadub's voice. "I know something that's a lot more fun than that. Come to Scrub-Up Land and help me. Besides I really need you. I have so much to do as I am as busy as a one-armed drummer."
"Sure we'll come, Mister Rubadub!" said Nancy quickly. "How shall we get there?"
"Just look in the big box where you keep your rubbers. You'll find the magic shoes. The Fairy Queen said she sent them with Silver Wing last night after you were in bed. Come as soon as you can. Good-bye."
"What are you talking about? Why don't you come?" asked Nick, coming to see what kept Nancy so long.
Nancy hung up the receiver without answering and flew to the big box under the stairs where the over-shoes were kept.
She banged back the lid and started to fish around and in about three and three-quarter seconds she held up the two pairs of queer little shoes that were famous for their adventures.
"Hurry!" was all she said popping down on the floor where she was and untying her little leather shoes and putting the other ones on.
And not until Nick had done likewise and felt himself being whisked right out through the closed front door and down the road like a lightning express, did he know what it was all about.
Indeed, even then he didn't know exactly where they were going, but

GENERAL BOOTH PASSES SEVENTY

General Bramwell Booth, son of the founder of the Salvation Army, gathered in neighboring children to help him celebrate his seventieth birthday at Hadley Woods, England.

suddenly they were set down gently before a big gate, over which they spelled out the words, "Scrub-Up Land."
And there stood Mister Rubadub himself, all smiles, waiting to greet them. He had a big cake of soap in one hand and a fierce-looking scrubbing brush in the other. His sleeves were rolled up and he had on a big apron, but for all that you could tell that he was a fairy. There is no mistaking a real fairy, my dears.
"How d' do!" he said hospitably, changing his scrubbing brush over to the soap-hand, and wiping the other one dry on his apron so he could shake hands with his visitors. "I thought you'd be along about now. It doesn't take the Magic-Shoe-Express long to travel. No, sir! I certainly am glad to see you. But come right in. I'm a nice one to keep you standing here all day. Come right in to Scrub-Up Land and meet my friends."
The Twins followed the fairyman through the gate and along a little path between some bushes, and at last they came to a nice little house with a front porch.
On the front porch was a washing tub and all around on hooks hung brushes and scissors and combs of all kinds and sizes. On a shelf within easy reach stood a row of cans and bottles. It looked sort of like a barber shop and sort of like a laundry and sort of like a dentist office, for there was the big chair and everything.
"I'm getting the wood people and meadow people all cleaned up so they can go to the 'Land-Where-Spring-Is-Comeing,'" said Mister Rubadub.

EXILE ENDS

For thirty-six years Major E. A. Burke lived in Honduras, in exile. Now he is returning to his home in New Orleans at the age of eighty-five. He was State Treasurer in Louisiana in the late '80's, was indicted on a charge of reissuing cancelled state bonds to the extent of $200,000, and fled to Honduras in 1890. Now the charges against him have been dropped.
