MEN OF VISION ARE THE HOPE OF CANADA

According to Arthur Hunt Chute, Who Addressed the Rotary Club.

"Canadian Nationalism" was the subject of the address delivered before the Rotary Club on Thursday afternoon by Arthur Hunt Chute, journalist. In the course of his remarks Mr. Chute deprecated the lack of courage with which, he said, Canada was facing her problems and made a plea for a return of the spirit shown during the war, when people all over the country sunk their little differences and all worked toward the one end. Canada's greatest need according to the speaker was a spark of that prophetic fire which inspired Jim Hill and Donald Smith, later Lord Strathcona, to open up that vast wilderness, now known as the fertile Canadian Northwest.

Canada is overshadowed by the United States, in the opinion of Mr. Chute and he sees in this both a blessing and a curse. One would gather, however, that he believes it rather more of a disadvantage than otherwise. He remarked that it was not ever worth while answering such men as Sinclair Lewis and Don Seitz who saw Canada as a future part of the United States.

"I believe Canada has a distinct contribution to make to the North American continent. Let us foster an aristocracy with 'all that comes from a kingship and a crown,'" he said. Greater than being a Canadian, Mr. Chute declared, was being a Britisher.

In the present concentration and monopolization of Canada's wealth by a few powerful concerns, the speaker saw a grave problem. It was anything but a healthy condition for young industries or for the rest of Canada outside of the financial district.

The youth of Canada, and by youth he did not imply young in years but rather men who still dreamed dreams and saw visions, were looked to by the speaker as the salvation of this country. The spirit of discontent which seemed prevalent just now, he said, was but an expression of the progressive spirit which was ready to break out at the call of the right leader. This leader, according to Mr. Chute, would have to possess other capabilities than being able to quote statistics and tax budgets.

Rotarian A. D. McConnell moved a vote of thanks, which was seconded by Rotarian W. J. McCallum. A number of ladies and other guests were present at the meeting including Dr. and Mrs. Chute, father and mother of the speaker and Mrs. T. W. Savary, his sister.

Picton, April 15.—The funeral of the late William Shannon was held from the home of his niece, Mrs. Peter Cole, Mary street, on Wednesday afternoon. Mrs. Cole's mother, Mrs. Sweeney, is a sister and the only surviving member of the family. The service was conducted by Rev. J. J. Mellor, with interment in Glenwood.

Capacity audiences greeted "The Golden Links - Minstrels," Picton's local colored troupe, at The Regent Theatre on Monday and Tuesday evenings when they were seen in "College Boys on the Campus." Gerald Way was interlocutor and the end men were Messrs. Mulholland, O. Ward, J. Vestervelt and A. Minaker. A musical sketch by the Orchestra and the quartette was particularly well rendered, the quartette singing "Southern Melodies," "Old Black Joe" and "Black Mammy." The show was clear brimmy and snappy throughout and reflected great credit on the young people who worked so assiduously to give an entertainment of merit.

LETTERS To The Editor Of The Whig

A Desirable Problem.

Sir: I have seen as item in your columns to the effect that thirteen unfortunates slept at the police station. It was also hinted that the police would institute charges of vagrancy against these men if they repeated too often. Is this fair? Surely it is no crime to be poor or unfortunate. Very many municipalities have a municipal lodging house where the "Down and Out" can get a bed for about fifteen cents a night. Work is scarce and those out of luck cannot sleep in the parks. This is the problem for the charitable societies.

Mrs. J. W. Hayes, died in Miami, Florida, on April 3rd, aged seventy-nine years. She was born near Brockville, a sister-in-law of D. W. Hayes, Brockville.

Death of Michael Haley. Michael Haley died at the home of his nephew, Martin Conroy, Carthage, N.Y., Friday morning, April 2nd. Death was due to acute neuritis, from which he had suffered during the past three years. Funeral services were held at St. James' church, Carthage, Monday, April 5th, at 9.30. The body was placed in the vault. Interment will be made at Glenwood cemetery, Watertown.

The deceased was born at Yarker, Ont., in 1864, but most of his life he had resided at Brownville, N.Y., where he was highly respected and leaves many friends. Seven years ago he retired from the paper mill industry, to reside with his nephew, where he passed away. Though his illness was recognized as serious, and very painful, death was not anticipated.

Two brothers, William Haley, of Butte, Mont., and Morris Haley, of Watertown, N.Y., and a sister, Miss Kate Haley, of Watertown, together with several nephews and nieces, survive him. His death follows closely that of a sister, Mrs. Margaret Conroy, who died at her home, Carthage, N.Y., November 12th, 1925.
