The Things Men Lie About. "No matter how excellent a man's intentions, it is impossible for him to be honest all the time." So Prof. Wallace W. Charters of the University of Chicago told the Ontario Educational Association last week.

Now Margaret Moores Marshall in the New York World makes this reply:

"For 'all' some of us would read 'any of'—but, waving aside all unnecessary cynicism, does not the professor's spasms of sex candor contain the suggestion for a new survey—What Do Men Lie About? It has been our observation that— Men Lie— About golf scores. About poker hands and winnings. About athletic prowess. About the running expenses of the car. About taking cold baths. About how many cigars they smoke a day. About what they said to the boss. About the money they made last year. About their being the boss at home. About the hit they made with the girls. What—ELSE—do men lie about? There is to be said for such an investigation: A study of its results will make it even harder than it is now for a man to tell a good one and be believed."

The Editor Hears

That the members of the Dominion Executive who have been in town this week preparing the agenda to be taken up at the annual meeting to be held in London, Ontario, were hard-working women who wasted very little time in social events which take up so many hours of most women's conventions. The members of the executive are all women who are accustomed to transact the business in hand with despatch and they accomplished a good deal in two days. They turned a deaf ear to offers of entertainment except the necessary luncheons, and tea was sent in to them so that the time would be saved. The members of the diocesan board would have arranged a drive for them if the time could have been spared from business, but the president felt that it could not.

That the peacetime activities of the Canadian Red Cross in Canada which include the enrolment of 105,000 children in the Junior Red Cross with the object of making healthy, happy citizens, were brought before the Central Council of the Canadian Red Cross at a meeting held in Toronto this week at which the president, Sir Robert L. Borden, presided.

That a glimpse of blue water along the shore is an earnest of spring and we hope before many days to see the dancing waves of Lake Ontario sparkling in the sunshine. Then we will turn with renewed energy to make our preparations for the summer, turn the house out of the windows and let in the sun and air. Look over our wardrobe and begin to garden. The people living near the lakes never believe spring has really come till they hear the boat whistle.

That His Grace, Archbishop Spratt having given his consent, a company of Girl Guides will be organized under the direction of some of the Roman Catholic Women's societies and Mrs. I. G. Bogart, divisional commissioner, is arranging for work to begin at once.

That the highway is in good condition and the motorists are beginning to enjoy life once more. Every day a new car appears driven by one's friends. If those fortunate enough to have cars would make up their minds to be generous in giving their friends who have none a lift now and then, or a drive in the country, they would be happier themselves and would make life more pleasant for others.

That London's Royal School of Needlework reports a revival of petit point embroidery, and another much-neglected art—the quilting of bed-spreads—has been taken up by Lady Dalhousie, while Lady Kyles' youngest daughter and Miss Angela Paget are two young people who have returned with great enthusiasm to the vogue for embroidery.
