DEATH OF W. BAILIE A VETERAN PRINTER

A Grand Old Citizen Quietly Slept Away on Monday Night.

An old time job printer, William Bailie, died at his home on Barrie street, on Monday night, on the eighty-sixth anniversary of his birth, following a short illness from pleuro-pneumonia. Deceased was born in Kingston, in 1840, son of Hugh Bailie, a shoe dealer. His uncles were Henry and Isaac Bailie (twins), who were also job printers in this city, and humorists of fame. William learned his trade with Creighton and Lightfoot and was an adept printer.

About half a century ago he purchased the job printing plant previously carried on by the late John Creighton, for whom he had previously worked. For twenty-five years thereafter Mr. Bailie carried on his work being of the highest character and with an artistic touch that was appealing to his clients. Then all work was done by hand. He was the official printer for Queen's University and was scrupulously careful in handling and printing examination papers. He had a closed shop when this work was being done. He was beloved by his employees and many an apprentice recalls his kindly manner and appreciative helpfulness. He twice occupied quarters in the old Whig office on King street and once on Brock street over the Merchants Bank.

Some twenty-five years ago Mr. Bailie retired, feeling that he was entitled to enjoy his well-earned patrimony. His cozy home on Barrie street—the upper one of the twin houses facing the Cricket Field—was his care in his retirement. He was a lover of flowers, and his summers were spent in his garden, his blooms being rare, fragrant and beautiful. His roses were the admiration of the citizens and he worthily maintained his reputation of "Kingston's Rose King."

He loved music, read extensively, delighted in companionship with his friends, was witty and sparkling in conversation and a lover of jokes. Many a one he "worked off" on his associates and friends. He was an old time Liberal, zealous for its prominence in Kingston. He attended St. Andrew's church, and, when in vigorous manhood, seldom missed being in his pew. He revered his old time pastors, Dr. T. G. Smith and Dr. John Mackie. He was a member of the Independent Forester Order.

In recent years Mr. Bailie was afflicted with semi-blindness but with quiet patience he bore the loss and maintained a cheerful happy spirit to the last. Deceased is survived by his widow, one daughter, Mrs. A. C. Johnson, Kingston, and two grandsons, W. S. Johnson, Montreal, and A. C. Johnson, Toronto, and several great grand-children, also by one sister, Miss Hattie Bailie, Kingston. His many friends, old and young will, with sorrowful hearts, offer sincere condolences to those who mourn. One of Kingston's truest, noblest and most worthy citizens has gone from us.
